Summer Sun Safety: What You Absolutely Need to Know Now

OUR EXPERT ANSWERS YOUR QUESTIONS

Maribeth Chitkara, MD
Pediatric Hospitalist,
Stony Brook Long Island Children's Hospital
Assistant Professor,
Stony Brook University School of Medicine

After the long snowy winter, few things are more appealing than a day at the beach, an afternoon by the pool or just catching a few rays in the backyard. But here's the thing: There is a right way and a wrong way to enjoy the summer, and it rests on just a few key behavioral changes.
Here, Dr. Maribeth Chitkara, one of Long Island's most committed advocates for summer safety and skin cancer prevention, discusses steps you can take today to keep yourself, your family and your children safe all summer long.

What are the three things everyone needs to know about sun safety?

One. That there is no safe level of sun exposure. If you are outside, you need sunscreen. Period. The recent claims that it is important to spend short periods in the sun unprotected in order to get vitamin D is medically unfounded. Because we cannot separate out the benefits of sun exposure from the damage it can cause, I recommend getting your vitamin D from foods and supplements, not the sun.

Two. To be appropriately protected, you need to apply a minimum of one ounce of sunscreen every several hours. This is much more than most people typically use. I recommend putting on a full layer of sunscreen 20 minutes before you leave the house, then a second layer once you get to the beach or the pool. Think of it like painting a wall. You need a base coat to start, then another coat for full and even coverage, then spot touch ups to finish off.

Three. Dress your children in swim shirts, so as to protect your child's upper arms, shoulders, back and chest without having to continuously apply sunscreen. These types of shirts typically offer a universal protection factor (UPF) of 50 or higher, and are particularly effective if your child is in and out of the water all day.

What should you look for in a sunscreen?

Most people know that it is important to use a sun protection factor (SPF) of 30 or higher, but what they may not realize is that they also need a sunscreen that protects against UVA rays as well as UVB. When choosing sunscreen, look for a broad spectrum product that protects against both. Recent studies suggest that the organic compound oxybenzone may have some harmful long-term effects. We don't know definitively, but check the ingredient list on the back of your sunscreen bottle and use an alternative if possible. Other ingredients to look for are zinc and titanium dioxide. Each offer superior protection because they actually form a physical barrier to harmful rays.

Are there any myths about sun exposure and tanning that you would like to address?

Yes. Some people believe that tanning beds are safer than sun exposure. This is absolutely untrue. In fact, rays from tanning beds are 50 times stronger than what you get from the sun. Avoid them at all costs. Also, some people who use spray tanning and other artificial products believe that the "tan" they get from them gives them a base coat of sun protection. Not true. The chemicals in these products only affect the top layer of skin and will wash off or fade in a matter of days. You may look "tan" but you still need sunscreen.

How does Stony Brook advocate for the community regarding sun and summer safety?

Stony Brook is deeply committed to awareness, prevention and screening of skin cancers. For example, we work with the local SunWise Program, an EPA-sponsored initiative that offers a free education curriculum to children from kindergarten through grade six. We have collaborated with local and national organizations dedicated to the promotion of sun- safe practices and the prevention of skin cancer. Each spring, Stony Brook's Department of Dermatology offers to the community free skin cancer screenings. And, the Department has the advanced expertise to treat benign and malignant skin cancers.

Stony Brook Long Island Children's Hospital, part of Stony Brook University Medical Center, offers the most advanced pediatric specialty care for infants, children and adolescents in the region. With more than 100 board-certified specialists and subspecialists practicing in 30 pediatric specialties, Stony Brook Children's provides a full range of services—from well-baby care to complex surgery and pioneering treatments—in a setting that reflects the unique needs of children and their families. The facilities include a dedicated Pediatric Emergency Department, a Level III NICU, minimally invasive pediatric surgery, state-of-the-art imaging, and one-of-a-kind centers and specialty programs.

The Bonackers

East Hampton, Fireplace and the World's Biggest Potato

By Dan Rattiner

Until about 15 years ago, the Village of Springs was largely populated by a very tight- knit group of people known as the Bonackers. They were the descendants of working class Englishmen who had come here accompanying the first English settler back then, an upperclassman named Lion Gardiner. The year was 1639 and the King had given Gardiner a royal land grant asking that he settle here. He settled on an island just offshore of Amagansett. Many of those who worked for him settled on the mainland and they called the place Springs. They also called themselves Bonackers, so named after an Indian word meaning root vegetables. The Bonackers did plant potatoes among other things. Mostly they were known for clamming and fishing, though.

Dan Rattiner's second memoir, IN THE HAMPTONS TOO: Further Encounters with Farmers, Fishermen, Artists, Billionaires and Celebrities, is now available in hardcover wherever books are sold. The first memoir, IN THE HAMPTONS, published by Random House, is now available in paperback.

I kind of miss the Bonackers. I live among them, or in this community among what is left of them. I confess to having been fascinated by them when I decided to move here. It was the early 1970s. I found them to be straightforward, gentle, funny and hardworking. What you saw is what you got. And they spoke in this strange English dialect that I had never heard before.

They were also, I think, fascinated with me to some degree. I was a Jewish boy from New Jersey. They were, well, they went back 300 years. I was told by one of them at Damark's Deli one day that they would put up with me, but no funny business. Couldn't prevent me buying a house if that's what I wanted to do. Looked me straight in the eye. Gave me a little smile. I got it. Me and my young family would be safe here.

Of course, I soon embarked on a little funny business. Right across the street from my house there was this narrow sandy beach where about a half dozen Bonackers kept their clammer boats. These were old wooden rowboats, attached by pulleys to a metal stake on the ground at one end and another metal stake in four feet of water just offshore. They'd pull them in to go off clamming.

I bought myself an old rowboat and kept it there. There was no law saying I couldn't do it. I didn't clam but I did take my kids out for a row around the harbor from time to time. The Bonackers just ignored that I did that.

There is so much to tell you about the Bonackers, now almost gone; I almost don't know where to begin. Perhaps at the end. They lived here and their culture thrived here from 1640 until about 1990. I got here in the 1970s. Now they are mostly gone. They left, or I thought they left, more about this later, because the value of their homes went through the roof, because laws made it difficult to clam and fish in the old traditional ways, and because of overfishing and pollution, their fish stocks declined. I long believed they moved—this was a population of about 1,500 people—almost en masse, to a new place they found off in the wetlands of North Carolina. I believed that until I learned differently just this past week, from one of the remaining Bonackers living in the old ways, Stuart Vorpahl.

Turns out that most of them are still here. But the new generation doesn't embrace the old clannish ways. They are of the world of Twitter, videogames and cellular phones, just like everybody else. They've left the area, and

Jetty Problem

The Montauk Inlet and What We Won't Be Doing About It

By Dan Rattiner

I was reading the other day about a new subway system being built in Wuhan, China's ninth-largest city. It will be 160 miles long, and will feature at one point an industrial park with a skyscraper half again taller than the Empire State Building.

The interesting part of this is that its projected completion time—five years—is exactly the same as the completion time for the two-mile-long Second Avenue Subway (SAS) system, now under construction in Manhattan. When we get the two miles done, they get the 160 miles done, plus a giant skyscraper.

I was put in mind of this story yesterday when I read about the waterfront residents of the Soundview Section of Montauk objecting to some damage apparently caused by the lengthening of some jetties there. There are two stone jetties, and they protect the entrance to Montauk Harbor where the boats come and go. Money was obtained for the job of extending them 10 years ago and the rocks were brought in. I think they were lengthened 20 feet farther into Block Island Sound. It seems that as a result of this, the flow of sand there, which is east to west, has changed. The narrow beach the residents of Soundview enjoyed is hardly there anymore. Floodwaters come on the west side over the dunes and flood the place from time to time. Maybe something else caused this. But it really does look like the jetties.

People say that here in America, we don't make anything anymore. They say almost everything we use is made in China, or the Philippines, or Indonesia.

Here is how the jetty problem at Montauk would be handled if it were to come about in a coastal town in China. They'd do a study for a month or two. And then if they found the lengthening of the jetties had diverted the sand flow as many suspect, they would get in a whole lot of machinery and remove the addition in about a week.

Here's what's happening in Montauk. A group of Soundview residents filed a lawsuit last January against the Town of East Hampton,

HOW I MISSED OUT ON RULING THE WORLD

By Dan Rattiner

So here's what we've learned so far about the grip that British newspapers have held over the government, up until now.

The press not only hides in the bushes, leaps out to take embarrassing pictures, eavesdrops on conversations, taps phones and steals answering machine messages from everyone—absent any privacy for anybody—they do these outrageous things to get a sleazy story without the slightest concern that anybody is going to stop them. They've pretty much terrorized all the government officials.

How could this be? Well, it's ENGLAND! Those running the country present themselves as the very epitome of proper society—genteel, civilized, moral, forthright—and they will do anything, it seems, to keep from being embarrassed.

So the tabloid media eats them for lunch. The media does favors for the Prime Minister, pays off the police, and whatever else is needed to get the ruling class to hand over juicy details for their articles. Those that don't cooperate get threats, issued in private, both veiled and unveiled. And then, if they still don't come around, there comes the inevitable negative stories about the politician in the papers, together with awful pictures of them looking really ugly, together with commentary about their wayward behavior.

so, as the older Bonackers die out with the kids off doing other things, so goes the culture. It's an old story.

Here's some history about the Bonackers. There's a place at the end of Springs-Fireplace Road up by Gardiner's Bay known as Fireplace. It's called that because back in the 17th century when the Gardiners, living on their island offshore—it's about three miles offshore—wanted the workmen to send a boat over with supplies or whatever, they'd build a wood bonfire at the beach on the island, and, in response, the Bonackers would build a bonfire at the beach here in Springs. They'd got the message.

According to Wikipedia, the Bonackers lived isolated among themselves without much contact at all with the outside world until the 1950s. They got along fine farming and fishing, raising chickens and ducks, taking care of the Island. Their unusual English accent persevered. "Goin' downstreet," one of them might say, meaning he was going to ride a horse to downtown East Hampton. "Yes, yes, bub," might be a reply. Bub was what they called one another, bubbies, the plural. Upstreet meant they were coming back home. "Fines' Kind" was a compliment. Their kids walked the four miles to the East Hampton High School every day and back.

By the 1970s, when I got here, the Bonackers drove pickup trucks that had haul hitches on the back to bring their fishing boats down to the ocean beaches. They'd cast nets into the surf and crank them back in by an ancient method they called "haul seining." It was a trademark of the Bonac clan that if you had a pickup truck then you had to have at least one black lab dog accompanying you with it. He'd sit in the back bed of the truck and run excitedly around. He was going to the beach.

Imagine this. In the 1980s, haul seining was made illegal by the authorities. Took too many fish in too short a time. Billy Joel, also a friend of the Bonackers, went haul seining anyway with them. And he got arrested with the others. Next thing, in the 1990s, was a rule passed by the town that if you had a black lab or any other dog in the back of your truck running around, you had to have him "secured" with some sort of leash or bungee cord to keep him from falling out of the truck. None of the labs had ever done so that I ever heard of. But the summer people, driving their Porsches, who sometimes found themselves late for the club behind a Bonacker truck driving slow with the dog jumping around in the back, feared for the dogs' lives.

No damn wonder they left. Or the kids decided this was not worth pursuing.

It's not a total loss. The Bonac dialect is being preserved on tape at the East Hampton Library and at other libraries around the country. And I still remember them fondly.

When I first moved here, I had a farming story passed on to me by a Bonac friend. It had been told by an elderly and much-loved Bonacker named Ferris Talmadge Jr. a few years before. Talmadge was blind by that time. But he was still a wonderful story teller and someone with a tape recorder one day asked him to tell his Big Potato story, which he'd been telling for years and years so they could write it down. He did. And now I had it. And now you have it too.

In the fall of 1890, Ferris' father Ferris Talmadge Sr., who owned a potato farm in the Springs, received a letter from the promoters of the Chicago Worlds Fair of 1893. They had heard of him and his accomplishments, they wrote, and they wanted to ask if he would, for a fee, grow the largest potato in the country so it could be brought to Chicago and go on view for the visitors there. Of course, Talmadge said yes. The fee would be big, though. In the spring of 1891, Talmadge took a special cutting out to one corner of his farm and planted it on a low hill there. This was a considerable distance from his regular potato field. He would need lots of room for it to grow. During that summer of 1891, Talmadge had his farmhands rake into the soil a special kind of potato food he had created. When the potato plant popped up, he had a special kind of water ready for it. The potato grew in the ground all through the summer of 1891 and Talmadge could see that the height of the hill was rising and he was pleased. But that fall, when he harvested all the rest of his potatoes he left this one in. To grow it really big, he knew, he would need another growing season. The Promoters of the Chicago Worlds Fair called him that autumn and asked him how

Rebekah Brooks and Rupert Murdoch

Here's my favorite story of what happens to British politicians if they don't cooperate.

About five years ago, a somewhat overweight middle-aged Member of Parliament, Clare Short, commented to somebody during a TV show that something ought to be done about all the porn and filth that appears in some of the country's tabloid newspapers. She particularly objected to the tasteless photos of young topless women that appear on page 3 every day, a tradition in England for as long as anybody can remember.

Here's what happened to Clare Short.

The next morning, she and the rest of England woke up to the following headline on the front page of The Sun, which Rupert Murdoch owns: "Fat, Jealous' Clare Brands Page 3 Porn."

Below it was a picture of Clare Short's head pasted on the neck of a very attractive young topless woman.

The newspaper did not publish a whole photograph of Clare Short though. She is, or was until that time, quite well known throughout the country and so that was not necessary. Everybody knows what she looks like.

But the newspaper did not stop at that. Later in the day, a busload of beautiful young women came to Clare Short's home in Birmingham to protest her comments about toplessness. They strutted around topless. Photographers from the newspaper took photos of them. A reporter interviewed several people on the street who said they "liked" seeing women topless in the newspaper. Another reporter interviewed one of the topless women who identified herself as Nicola McLean, age 22.

"Even Clare has boobs," she said, "but obviously she's not proud of them like we are of ours."

Thus ended Clare Short's short public career.

The English press's attack on privacy knows no bounds. One writer reportedly confessed to erasing a teenage girl's phone messages when they were "full" so the teenager could get more for him to read. And, most shockingly, and this is what started this scandal, there is the report that a newspaper obtained the telephone messages of a 13-year-old girl who was subsequently murdered to see what they could make of them.

But you know what? As a journalist in America, I have secretly wondered—don't tell anybody—what it would feel like to laud it over everybody. I've been an upstanding journalist for all these years. I feel left out!

I might disagree with Southampton Mayor Mark Epley. I could headline: MAYOR EPLEY WEARS RED UNDERSHORTS if he ignored me and if one of my minions photographed him picking up a pair of them at Kmart in Bridgehampton. WHAT'S HE HIDING?

Then the next day, I could get a phone call from the Supervisor of East Hampton begging me to understand that the young woman another of my minions had photographed him squiring around with in downtown Montauk was actually his daughter.

"I could send you her birth certificate!" he will cry.

I could save the beaches, preserve the wildlife, rebuild historic sites, hold band concerts, raise money for the poor, have more sandcastle competitions, and on the Fourth of July have the biggest damn fireworks show at Main Beach ever.

It would be nice.

On second thought—and this is in real life—you know what I just did? I went online and downloaded the form I need to fill out from the Freedom of Information people down in Washington to get the contents of "the file" that the FBI has on me, if they have a file on me.

What if they DON'T have a file on me? Could that possibly be true? I've spent 51 years now editing this newspaper, shaking the trees as best I can, trying to help out here and there, taking stands where I think it's important, telling jokes I've liked and otherwise making a fool of myself.

If the FBI says there IS no file on me, can I believe them? Who says you can believe the FBI? Well, I could always call Rupert Murdoch's people. Isn't it true Rupert was "spotted" sitting in a café in Sag Harbor the other day?

Did you hear that noise?

Ooh La La

Remember Melissa and the Moguls? Here's Her NewVideo

By Dan Rattiner

I don't know if you are aware of this, but in addition to my career writing Dan's Papers, I've also made a career being a movie star and a rock star. I am not making this up.

Not long ago I had a speaking role in a made for TV movie. It's a small role, but it's a role nevertheless.

It's also true that my talents as a rock star are limited to being part of a backup band. For 10 years now, I've been part of the backup band on stage for Melissa Levis, when needed, and also, just this past month, a dancer in a music video she has just made that is premiering next week.

I suppose I should start by describing my film career. Three years ago, my wife said we should fly to Sofia, Bulgaria for the weekend. Why? Because her son Scoop, who had gotten an internship as an assistant to the famous film director Roger Corman, and was now in Bulgaria looking after one of his boss's interests, the new movie he was producing on a set in that city for the SciFi Network. It was, and is, called Cyclops, starring Eric Roberts. It takes place in ancient Roman times.

As sometimes happen, before we got there, there had been a break in the case. A man who had a part in the film got sick and Scoop was asked to step in. Didn't we want to see Scoop perform? We sure did.

"They've got a big scene they're filming in a replica of the Roman Colloseum in Sofia and he's in it. Let's go!"

We went. We watched Scoop perform. And then, suddenly, they had a scene where they needed extras. They dressed me up as a senator, they dressed my wife up as a senator's wife, they dressed Scoop's sister and brother up as Roman citizens—I forgot to tell you the whole group of us went—and we sat in the stands of the Colloseum for a scene where a slave was going to fight the Cyclops to the death out on the AstroTurf playing field, or

SOUTHAMPTON'S PLANS FOR AUTUMN LEAVES

By Dan Rattiner

In the fall, years ago, towns in the Hamptons just let the leaves fall to the ground. Those with landscaped yards complained. Why can't we just rake them to the sides of the road? So the towns instituted a leaf pickup program. They'd make one pass in the fall, giving it lots of publicity ahead of time to make sure people knew what day it would be. Later, after a windy day on the day of leaf pickup, they decided that in future years they would hand out plastic bags at the town and village halls to those who wanted them. That worked better. Sort of. By the way, you can't burn leaves in your yard as is allowed in many places elsewhere. It's a fire hazard here. That's what they decided all those years ago.

Now, in Southampton, things have gotten really complicated. Five years ago, they passed laws saying landscapers could not leave leaves in front of a home, and had to get a permit to take them to the dump. Many landscapers complied. Others just dumped leaves in empty lots. Did it on moonless nights, I guess. Then last year, for financial reasons, East Hampton abandoned its leaf pickup program, so on other moonless nights, all sorts of leaves now wind up all over the place in Southampton because

Suffolk County, Ruth Noemi Colon, who is the acting Secretary of State for New York, and Joe Martens, the acting commissioner of the State Department of Environmental Conversation, all of whom may or may not have been guilty of extending the jetties and therefore responsible for the damage caused. The lawyer for the Soundview Residents, Jonathan Sinnreich, said at the time that he intended to add the federal government to the lawsuit at a later date.

But now just seven months later, this lawsuit is being amended. It's only a minor change. But it's a significant one.

Sinnreich has found that the federal government may not be liable at all, or at least not as much as he originally thought.

It's been thought for years that the jetties were built in 1936 by the federal government to help Montauk create a sheltered harbor for its fishing boats. Before 1936, they were docked or anchored in the open waters of Fort Pond Bay. Curiously, though this is what was thought to have happened, today the deed to the jetties is held by Town of East Hampton. That's why the lawsuit is largely against East Hampton. But how did the Town wind up with the jetties if they were federally-built jetties?

It turns out that in 1936 the Feds originally decided NOT to build the jetties. They said they didn't have the money. But then a group of Montauk fishermen headed up by lobsterman Perry Duryea III, the son of a congressman, went down to Washington, talked to them about how important the Montauk Harbor inlet was to them, how they wanted to grow a big fishing village and make a big industry there and they thus persuaded Congress to make the money available to the Army Corps of Engineers.

So it was the Engineers who did build it. But there was a deal made. Since Washington had originally turned the request down, the deal was that the Town should take responsibility for the maintenance of the jetty and for them to do that, take title to it after the Feds built it. There were other conditions. The Feds should receive a paper holding them harmless for anything that happened at the jetties. And the Feds would have to receive an easement from the Town so any boat could go in and out, not just the ones approved by the Town.

Turns out the Feds did get the easement they wanted, but they never got a release holding them harmless for bad things that might happen there.

So this makes everything more complicated. The recent repairs on the jetty were made at the request sent by the Town of East Hampton to Joe Martens and Ruth Noemi Colon, who work for the State of New York but who have an arrangement with the Feds which would allow the Feds to provide the bulk of the funding to do the work.

What a mess. It's possible that without the paper to hold the Feds harmless, the entire sale of the inlet to the Town could be null and void. Then what?

I predict that five years from now, the 150-story skyscraper in Wuhan will be topped off, the ribbon will be cut to the 160-mile subway system there, and the Second Avenue Subway in Manhattan will have struck water and been delayed for another year or two.

I also predict that five years from now, nothing whatsoever will be done to remove the extension of the jetties because it will be still wending its way through the courts—with the lawyers making millions—and the residents of Soundview still experiencing further damage to their properties and homes.

The only good thing I can say about this comparison is that here in the USA, Joe Martens and Ruth Noemi Colon will both be protected from financial loss by contracts New York State has with them to keep its employees from harm.

If these two were in China, they'd probably be lined up and shot.

Casino Plans

By T.J. Clemente

Late last year, Shinnecock Gaming Authority member Phil Brown said it would be most prudent to create one casino close to New York City (perhaps in Nassau County), possibly another large casino capable of providing high end entertainment as well as gaming in western Suffolk, and lastly a "Monte Carlo"-type casino (with bingo and slot machines) "near our homelands in Southampton."

Well, phase one of that plan is coming closer to fruition. The Shinnecock Indian Nation, a tribe that the Town of Southampton founders negotiated with in 1640, presented a very telling proposal for phase one: the casino and hotel complex in Nassau County at Belmont Raceway.

It was presented to representatives of the many neighborhoods surrounding the third leg of the horse racing's Triple Crown venue. Their pitch was that the project will add jobs and breathe life into the area and facility. In the center of the plan is a hotel with 400 to 600 rooms located next to the historic racetrack, at about the same height as the present Belmont track grandstand. Also included in the presentation were plans to refurbish and modernize the racetrack, specifically the grandstand.

They also unveiled their ideas for the most controversial part of the plan: the casino. According to the plan, the first Shinnecock Casino will stand on the 40-acre parking lot. To offset the use of the present parking for the casino location, a sophisticated high-rise parking lot design was presented as well.

The overall income of the Native American casino industry in the United States was $12.8 billion in 2001, and jumped to $22.5 billion by the end of 2005. By 2009, even with the economic downturn and other financial crises, tribal-owned casinos still took in $26.8 billion. As for this year, looking at Foxwoods in nearby Connecticut, June 2011 slot revenue was $51 million, the same as June 2010, despite a modest decline in total handle (which was down 3% to $616.4 million from the $636.9 million reported last year.)

However, after tumbling during the recession, gaming revenue should return to 2007 levels by the end of 2012, according to a recent report by national accounting firm PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. This news may mean that the timing is just perfect for the Shinnecock Nation's first venture into building a casino. However, the group must still obtain approval from numerous state and federal departments before it can move forward. Good news!

Sandra Smith, chairwoman for the Belmont Coalition for Sustainable Development, reportedly said that her impression of the response to the plan so far has been "very positive." She said that "everything they had in the plan are things we've been trying to do, it was really phenomenal." The presentation was made by tribal gaming authority members and officials from the tribe's development partner, Gateway Casino Resorts of Detroit.

Soccer Fever Goes Viral in America

By Dan Rattiner

Last Sunday afternoon I went to an art auction in Mecox for WPPB, our local public broadcasting station. Really why I went was because I had a drawing of mine in the auction, a cartoon I had done called HAPPY NEW YEAR 2002 and they told me it had been selected for the live auction. People were going to hold it up and walk it around. I had never had anything of mine auctioned off like that before, people raising their hands and bidding this and that. I wanted to see it.

Before I left the house in East Hampton, however, I set a timer on the TV to record a show I wanted to watch. From 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., ESPN would broadcast a women's soccer World Cup match between the United States and Japan for the world title. A lot of people had been talking about this. I never understood the attraction of soccer, but it didn't seem like much else was on, and I wanted to relax in the late afternoon before heading out for that evening's summer festivities here in the Hamptons.

Anyway, I watched the soccer match when I got home from the art auction. (Nobody bid on my cartoon. C'est la vie.) It was a nice afternoon distraction. But I have to say now I understand soccer. The entire country now understands soccer. In fact, the whole country pretty much shut down to watch this. I think, if what happened to me watching this event happens to others, this is going to be considered the seminal event that finally turns America into the soccer-crazy country that it has so far avoided becoming.

Abby Wambach

From what I learned listening to the sports commentators before the match began, America has faced Japan 17 times in women's soccer in recent years and has won every one of them. America was supposed to make it to the playoffs. Japan was not. The Americans were heavily favored.

The game started. Physically, the two teams made quite a contrast. The Japanese were small and slight. The Americans were big and strong. The fastest people out there were the Americans. The only good thing you could say for the Japanese was that they were pretty crafty.

The Americans ran all over the Japanese in the first half. They also ran all over them in the second half. Most of the time, the Americans were swarming around the Japanese net trying to get the ball in. And most of the time, the Japanese would try to kick it out of the way to keep the Americans from doing it.

It is not easy using just your feet and your head to get a ball into a net on the other side of somebody trying to keep you from doing that. Again and again, the Americans fired away at the Japanese goal. They bounced it off the crossbar. They banged it into the goalie who only just managed to deflect it away from the goal by a few inches.

In the various short timeouts that occurred during the first half when somebody got injured and was lying on the ground for a few minutes, the Americans would assemble by their coach, who it seemed to me was telling them to just get rougher and rougher. On the other side, the Japanese coach seemed to be trying to find creative new ways to get the ball down to the other end.

Indeed, the Americans now began playing rougher. There were more violent collisions. The collisions would throw the Japanese players back, the Americans would come charging ahead. Midway through the first half, the Americans broke through and scored. At this point, I really began to understand this game. There were set situations in which you could do things. But there were screwy situations too. The idea was to sort of combine them both, hope your opponent wasn't in an advantageous position and pray for luck. If it was there, there could be a goal.

But the Japanese team, not letting the goal bother them, played happily on as if this had never happened. If they got knocked down, they got up enthusiastically. They could not run as whatever it was back in Roman times.

A Master of Ceremonies introduced this "entertainment," standing on the playing field. He droned on and on. The crowd in the stands was getting antsy. Then comes my big line. I stand up, wave an arm at the Master of Ceremonies dismissively and shout, in English, "Get on with it!" And indeed, the M.C. gets on with it.

I say that this was in English because, in fact, we were the only four in those stands in the replica Roman Colloseum who spoke English. Everyone else in the stands, all the other extras, were shouting in Bulgarian. But as I said, this was for American TV.

You can rent Cyclops on Netflix. You can get it at Blockbuster. You can dial it up on your cable TV. And so now, on the Internet, where you go to see the film careers of all the famous actors, you find ME! That's my one role. So far. No Academy Awards yet. Call my agent.

Okay, so that disposes of my film career.

Now we come to my rock star career. In the late 1990s, singer Melissa Levis, who I did not know at the time, called me up out of the blue at the paper to ask if I would like to be in a rock band called Melissa and the Moguls. I said sure, what do I have to do?

Melissa had written eight wonderful songs about the beautiful life in the Hamptons in rock and roll style. We'd perform them at The Steven Talkhouse in Amagansett. Over the next two years, we performed there several times and also at some other venues, including a nightclub on West 67th Street in Manhattan.

One of my greatest memories sitting in the "green room" on the second floor of The Steven Talkhouse with my fellow moguls late on a Saturday night, waiting to start our first set. Below, the place was packed. Up here there were pictures on the walls of the famous and fabulous who had been up there, tuning their instruments, mumbling their songs, getting ready—Paul Simon, Jimmy Buffet, Billy Joel and Jon Bon Jovi. This place was, and is, famous.

We clattered down the stairs when the time came—myself, New York socialite and department store heir Jonathan Farkas, industrialist and environmentalist Andy Sabin, banker Pat Malloy (he of the 220-foot yacht) and clothing mogul Alan Frank. Melissa, in spangles, looked fabulous. The crowd cheered. We played: me on the kazoo, Malloy on the maracas, Sabin on the tambourine, Frank and Farkas on guitar. Melissa sang the songs she wrote. We sang the choruses. The people gave us a standing ovation. What an evening that was.

And then there was more. There was a reunion in Miami Beach, another in Aspen, then a recording session back at The Steven Talkhouse with a new member of the group, comedian Robert Klein, singing some of the choruses.

What a CD that was. And still is. Some of the tunes from that CD were used in the film King of the Hamptons, a documentary made by Dennis Lynch that came out in 2009 and in which I had a role. (Film appearance, Part 2.)

Now, it is 10 years after Melissa and the Moguls, and Melissa calls me again and can she come over to our house in East Hampton and film part of a new music video there? I ask—can I be in it? And she says only if you agree to learn this dance we are all doing in the video and only if you agree to allow three beautiful girls in matching flowered dresses to pile into the backseat of your 50-year-old sports car (1959 Triumph TR-3) and go roaring off while the cameras whir, or whatever they do these days. I say yes.

And also, she says, I will be showing up with a professional ballet dancer from Brazil who performs in the video.

Do I have to dance with him? I ask. You have to dance alongside of him, she says, facing the camera, doing the dance moves. Try not to make a fool of yourself.

Since the days of Melissa and the Moguls, Melissa has gone on to do Off Broadway, private parties, clubs, children's shows, gotten married, produced a son and, well, what the hell is this?

"It's one of the songs I wrote 10 years ago," she tells me on the phone. "It's called 'Ooh La La Hamptons,' and the group performing it, which now will include you, is called the Ooh La Las. But instead of a rock beat, we are doing it in Hip Hop."

This is the 21st century, she says.

Oh, say I.

Melissa shows up in her flowered dress, along with two other beautiful flowered Go-Go-dressed girls, the male dancer from Brazil,

Southampton Center for Arts Planned for Job's Lane

By T.J. Clemente

Great news for the Village of Southampton: the historic space that now houses the Parrish Art Museum on Jobs Lane will not be abandoned after the Parrish moves into the new $25 million, 34,500 square-foot building in Water Mill. The new facility will triple the Museum's current exhibition space for the Parrish collection, which includes more than 2,600 pieces of art from the 19th century to today, as well as temporary exhibitions. The progress on the museum's new home can be seen as you drive east on Route 27 (it's on the north side). The roof is now being put on the building, which was designed by celebrated Swiss architects Herzog & de Meuron.

But the cheers are for what will become of the old building on Jobs Lane. "At the end of next summer...we've gotta have a game plan ready," Southampton Village Mayor Mark Epley said. "We've gotta start whatever type of construction we're gonna start because we want that space—whether it's internal or external—utilized next summer."

When the Jobs Lane building was designed in the 1890s, Mr. Samuel Parrish, who actually lived in Philadelphia but summered in Southampton at his family estate, was at the center of its creation. After being born into a family of prominent Pennsylvania Quakers and educated at Harvard College, Mr. Parrish developed a keen eye for talented artists and began collecting. The story goes that while purchasing art in Italy around 1896, Mr. Parrish first envisioned the building that now exists on Jobs Lane. In Mr. Parrish's words, he wanted to "transplant to a small, once-Puritan village on the eastern end of Long Island a delicate exotic in the form of an artistic collection that would express at least something of the spirit of the Italian Renaissance."

Next summer, the Village-owned building and grounds will receive a three-year, $20 million renovation and expansion. The updated historic edifice will eventually house the new "Southampton Center for the Arts," a multi-disciplinary arts institution that will serve as both a platform for art as well as a bridge from the past to the future. Duncan Webb, president of Webb Management Services, and Douglas Moss, a partner in the New York-based planning firm ForeSite Facility Planners, presented four plans at a Village Planning Commission meeting on July 7 at the Village Justice Center. All plans will improve the "building's footprint," while also seeking to preserve and enhance the surrounding arboretum.

Mayor Epley and other village officials estimate that the renovation project will cost between $10 million and $12 million. They are hoping to privately raise the sum of $10 million for estimated operational costs.

In all four plans, the main building will present a dramatic south-to-north grounds exhibit, with a touch of the modern in the form of an espresso bar. There will also be gallery space and a unique lobby with additional gallery space. There is a plan for a quaint path from Main Street ascending to the structure, invoking the all-important historic flavor that permeates the East End.

Surveys showed that the community wanted to use the space for cultural objectives once the Parrish moves out in 2012. Many are enthusiastic that the space that Samuel Parrish first used to house his masterpieces will someday manifest a whole new dimension of the ever-evolving world of modern Western art out here in the Hamptons.

One opposing view came from a blogger on a popular East End website who stated, "$20 million in Southampton village equates to approximately $7000 per registered voter... The 1800s were quite a few years ago and those antiquated tired folks haven't been relevant for decades. The artist colony is neither artist nor colony anymore. This is a silly idea, as out of touch as anything that has occurred in the Village in a long time." Hopefully this person will realize how very wrong he or she is, because, as the saying goes, it is the art that defines the culture. I, for one, applaud Mayor Epley and the Southampton officials who understand the importance of having something that will draw the community into the heart of the Village.

We rehearse and then perform our part of the video, both out by our pool and on the front deck with the boats in the background for about two hours. Then we drive down to Indian Wells Beach and I watch her film a segment there. Then we all go back to our house, she drops us off, then she and her entourage go off to film down on Main Street and also, I later learn, at the home of "Mr. Broadway" Stewart Lane and his wife Bonnie. The bit downtown has total strangers doing the dance and singing, the bit at the Lane house has the Lanes in the pool, singing.

A week later, an e-mail arrives. The whole thing, three minutes and forty-two seconds long, is now online. Go watch it. It's GREAT!

Can I post it on www.danshamptons.com? I ask her.

Put it up, she tells me. A pre-launch sneak peek. Then we'll set up an official launch.

Until the official launch, go see three minutes and forty-two seconds of pure gold at www.danshamptons.com and click either on Videos or Dan's Daily. Both routes lead to it. Enjoy.

the East Hampton residents bring them there. NOBODY wants the leaves.

This year, Southampton Village passed a law banning plastic bags. Now leaf bags made of paper—made from trees that produce leaves, it has not passed my notice—are being sold at various locations in Southampton. Finally, the Town Highway Department is trying to save money by spending less. Last year, they spent $1.2 million picking up leaves. This year they propose to spend only $700,000.

They'll have fewer people out there doing the pickup. How will they arrange for there to be fewer leaves to pick up? Easy. They will offer free vouchers to the citizenry. Come in to town hall and pick up your free voucher. The voucher, once you have shown you are a town resident, will allow you to personally haul up to eight cubic yards of leaves in your paper bags up to some new transfer stations near population centers that will be set up. Each will have a leaf compactor. There will be two stations in Bridgehampton, one in Noyac and one in North Sea.

All this requires a town board resolution. The town board is thinking about it. We'll get those pesky leaves outta those yards one way or another.

Will Town Repeal Noyac Bay Avenue Parking Ban Fiasco

By Dan Rattiner

A very important vote will take place at the meeting of the Southampton Town Board on Tuesday July 26. It involves who can or cannot park at the end of the very peaceful and quiet Noyac Bay Avenue where it dead-ends, overlooking the inlet into the bay.

This is a public road, paid for and taken care of by the Town taxpayers. However, last year, the members of a club—the Northampton Colony Yacht Club, which exists just next door to the dead end—told the town that many robberies on boats nearby were occurring and asked that NO PARKING signs be put up at the road's end. A concerned citizen, who used to like to park there to watch the boats come into the harbor, got the police records of thefts and robberies there. There was only one, and that took place in 2008.

It is wrong under any circumstances, in my opinion, for the Town to pass a law preventing the public from parking at a public road end. To do this under false circumstances is a disgrace. Such a law should be repealed.

If you drive down to that road end, which I did the other day, you will encounter eight signposts with a total of 16 different signs, urging you to keep away. Many of them seem to be other than Town signs. Many are on Town property. You will also be watched. I had been told about this. I stayed at this road end and otherwise drove around the loop of this pleasant residential community for a half hour. I passed a person walking a dog by the side of the road, smiled and waved and got glared at. A vehicle followed me part of the time. I certainly felt unwelcome. I was on

Best Books In America: The Pushcart Prize

By Allyson Zacharoff

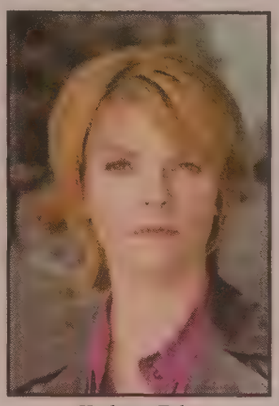
What does one-half of a star television duo do after her stint on a 10-year series ends? Support fabulous writers, of course.

At least, that's what Kathryn Erbe, who played detective Alexandra Eames on the hit show "Law and Order: Criminal Intent" for the last decade before its conclusion earlier this summer, has chosen to do. This well-known actress has signed on to appear at a fundraiser for the Pushcart Prize anthology of literature at Guild Hall this Saturday, July 23 at 8 p.m.

For those who know Erbe, her decision to appear at the event may not come as too much of a surprise. This extremely sweet woman describes herself as an "avid reader," and shares that she's "just so happy to encourage what they do."

The widely respected Pushcart Prize writing collection has been published annually by the Puschart Press since 1976. This small press combs through nominations submitted by literary magazines and book editors to select the best pieces of writing available. These submissions include everything from a single poem to a chapter from a novel, and with such loose requirements for its pieces the press can have a wide selection of excellent literature from which to choose. Their high standards ensure an exemplary compilation every year that readers everywhere look forward to reading.

The Pushcart Prize anthology has garnered much praise through the years by representing some of the best modern literature in its pages. Many prominent authors first gained recognition through their publication in this anthology, including John Irving, Andre Dubus, Mona Simpson and Rick Moody, as well as one of Erbe's favorite authors, Raymond Carver.



Kathryn Erbe

The Pushcart Prize makes its presence known out here on the East End with its annual summer fundraiser, this year called "Speaking in Tongues: A Benefit for the Pushcart Prize." Organized by WordTheater, a nonprofit organization that aims to celebrate literature through oral storytelling, the event raises money to encourage the continued publication of The Pushcart Prize Anthology. In addition to Kathryn Erbe, other celebrity guests performing at Saturday's event include Kevin Corrigan (The Departed), Denis O'Hare (The Proposal) and CCH Pounder (Avatar).

Erbe's 10-year presence on "Law and Order: Criminal Intent" led to a close working partnership with her on-screen partner, Vincent D'Onofrio. "I'm just so proud of the longevity that we've had, and really proud of the partnership that Vincent and I had," she says. The pair played off each other for years in a way that won the show many followers, though as Erbe says, the acting is "deceptively difficult and deep."

But it always comes back to the story. Erbe explains that the appeal of acting for her comes in her ability to "pretend to be someone other than [herself]." This recognizable actress actually started her career on the stage, when she auditioned for and received a role in a Broadway production of Grapes of Wrath. Now that Erbe's show has ended, she may return to her career roots, saying, "I really would love to do more theatre."

Literary aficionados know the excitement that comes with discovering a new author, a new genre, a new story. The way our hearts start to speed up, the words conveying a new idea or emotion that we have never read before. For many, this experience comes most poignantly in the respected Pushcart Press. Join bibliophile Erbe and others this weekend for what promises to be a wonderful event to support some of the best writers of our time.

This weekend's "Speaking in Tongues: A Benefit for the Pushcart Prize" will take place at Guild Hall, 158 Main St., Easthampton on Saturday, July 23 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $100/95 members for prime orchestra and a VIP meet and greet, $45/43 for orchestra seating and $25/23 for balcony seating. WHAT HAPPENED AT DAN'S TWO FORKS

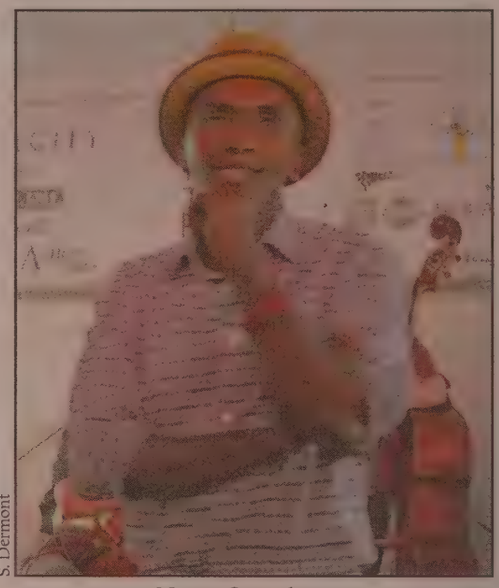
By Dan Rattiner

Last fall, when my partners in Dan's Papers from Manhattan Media began to think about doing some big event out here in the Hamptons, they turned to me, as if I were the big guru of everything Hamptons, and asked me what I thought would be worth doing. I would guide them.

It wasn't as if I was actually to come up with the idea. Being from Manhattan and being my senior partners, they had all sorts of different ideas. Some involved bicycles. Others involved art and antiques. One idea involved fashion. Then there was this idea about food and wine. It was ultimately they who made the decision.

I mention this because leading up to the event we held on Saturday night, Dan's Taste of Two Forks, I had helped with the marketing, written some stories and did a few other things, but ultimately I just watched from the sidelines until the day of the event when I found myself standing under a tent in a field inside of which more than a thousand people—ultimately 1,600 people passed through the doors—who were munching happily on samplings of food from more than 40 restaurants and glasses of wine from more than 20 wineries, and I fielded questions about the idea for this event from members of the media.



S. Dermont

Marcus Samuelsson

"We're told this was your idea, all this food and wine. It's an amazing idea. How did you think of it?"

They look for sound bites, as you know. I thought about giving them the long explanation. Then I gave up. So what they got essentially was a sort of "aw, shucks."

I thought I'd set the record straight here. I did vote for food and wine. After all the residents and visitors come to to eastern Long Island for its amazing bounty from the sea and the land, and I thought they would leap at the chance to come to an event devoted to sampling how all this largess could be prepared by the masters.

But how to make it something other than just the same old, same old? I have long advocated that people holding events in the Hamptons come up with things that veer off from the same old, same old. But in general, nobody pays any attention to me.

What same old, same old usually is is valet parking, an A-Z reception table at which you get your wristband, waiters serving cocktails and people making speeches, a "thank you for coming," an explanation of what the party benefits, a silent auction, an hour of networking, round tables for eight with numbers on them in random order at which everybody is told after a while to sit down in chairs facing, after which dinner is served by a caterer either by buffet or waiters, people start dancing and then everybody goes home, but with a goodie bag of stuff on the way out.

Since there are probably 50 of these parties during the 10 weeks of the summer that need attention, it can get pretty monotonous.

There are exceptions. And I look forward to them. Robert Wilson's Water Mill party is one of them. It is largely performance art delivered by actors dressed as elves and other creatures who interface with you as you walk through that place's vast woods. The Southampton Hospital annual party is another, though not so wild. At that benefit, there is a theme, and they do it up to the nines. Could be an ocean liner or South Pacific or Ipanema. The interior decoration would blow away any junior prom. As for the rest, mostly they are all just gestures.

STACY REPORTS ON DAN'S TWO FORKS

By Stacy Dermont

The first annual Dan's Taste of Two Forks premier food event last Saturday was one huge Hamptons white tent event. Here's what set it apart from all the others: the vibe. During the course of the evening, over 1,600 people came together to support local food pantries by enjoying the best of what the East End has to offer—food, wine and atmosphere. The 1,600 came in all shapes and sizes, colors and persuasions. From women in inexplicable hats to the ski bunny workin' the gray sweater dress to the guy in tight orange pants. There was a lot to be happy about in Bridgehampton that night and, accordingly, everyone was smiling. One thing all Hamptonians agree on: "Ya gotta eat."

At last, chefs, winemakers, sommeliers, farmers, cheese mongers are being recognized as professionals, as artisans, as celebrities by the general public. As Marcus Samuelsson told me in an interview, "I started cooking when chefs were not on TV, just fine dining and French cooking. Now kids see that it's a profession. In Europe it's different, food is more of a tradition. But Americans are finding their way—it's fun, interactive and democratic."

I've been working to promote and support local agriculture and restaurant culture for several years now. For fans like me this event was an affirmation as well as a celebration. Foodies rule! Our time has come. "Eat local" is now more than a trend, more than a mantra; it is a sustainable and preferred way of life. Of course it is—Suffolk County is the most productive agricultural county in New York State. We've got it all. What we can't grow we can fish and forage for. Right now there's salt water being dried by solar power in Amagansett, to give us local sea salt. Right now there's cheese ripening on Art Ludlow's farm in Bridgehampton. Right now hundreds of farmers, chefs, sous chefs, fishermen and winemakers are hard at work planning your next meal. And there's excitement in the air.

But enough about the hugeness, the timeliness, the rightness of this event—you want to know what all I tasted there, right?

I thought it best to lay off the wine so I could continue to write tiny notes in my little notebook all night. But I did indulge in great chats with winemakers Roman Roth (Grapes of Roth, Wolffer, Roanoke, Cru 22, Gramercy, Scarola) and Tree Dilworth (Comtesse Therese). They're both excited about this year's harvest.

So to begin I had some North Fork Potato Chips. I found the Rosemary-Garlic not overly ROSEMARY like so many others and the Sweet Potato quite crispy and thin—so many sweet potato chips on the market are over-thick.

I tried a Cold Dill Soup from 1770 House. It was perfection.

Next I indulged in a Strawberry-Ricotta Tart with Mascarpone Cream (why not have dessert in the middle?) from Nick & Toni's. The strawberries were from local fave Balsam Farms and the portion was topped with several very chewy dried strawberries, which made for a fun mix of textures. Silvia Lehrer was delighted when I brought her one.

On to the Local Fluke Tartar from the Grill on Pantigo. Local fluke is fabulous.

Then some Chilled Gingered Avocado Cucumber Soup that was touted as being both Raw and Vegan from Babette's. I tout it as being very tasty.

I passed on Race Lane's Tuna Tabbouleh only because I'd had it before—I thought someone else should have the intense pleasure. Chef Dana Lamel has a great smile, he was beaming throughout the event.

The ceviche from Southfork Kitchen was great.

Dan's Papers Publisher Bob Edelman suggested I try a cocktail from Pisco Porton. I did. I went back for a second after a respectable interval (approximately nine minutes). The rose petal floating on top made it particularly memorable.

There was a glut of people at Starr Boggs' table—no doubt for a good reason. But he was in a corner so I didn't enter the fray. Many people seemed to think that one should follow along the tables in order like good Episcopalians at coffee hour. It was generally easy to just nip in and out for some booty,

Two Forks

I went to one fundraiser earlier in July at which the theme was supposed to be Marrakesh, but consisted of only one thing out of the ordinary—a big sign that said HARRY'S BAR.

I'm sure we could make things more entertaining. How about THIS? How about a "debt ceiling" theme where you get handed a stick and get to bash at giant pinatas filled with pennies hung from the ceiling? It would be every man for himself. That would be nice.

And so it was that this amazing group of party planners, hundreds of them, led by Bob Edelman, our Publisher, and Ellen Dioguardi, our marketing guru here at Dan's Papers, together with COO of Manhattan Media Joanne Harras, ultimately in charge of the event, and Event Director Joanna Virello, who worked diligently with Compass restaurant owner Donny Evans as restaurant liason and KB Network's Karine Bakhoum, Mary Blanton and Kylene Sullivan (on PR) and Agency 21's Lisa Furst and Brett Friedman (experts in this area) and put this all together. It was an entire city—Dan's Taste of Two Forks—a completely unique event never done here before, and let me tell you, what we had last Saturday night was without a doubt the best place to eat in the Hamptons that night. You could get ANYTHING, a taste of it anyway, all prepared at booths from restaurants, manned by the chefs of the very best establishments in the area. You could get gazpacho, you could get shrimp in a blanket, you could get barbecue ribs from a top Zagat restaurant, you could get deviled eggs with caviar. Each portion was somewhere between a pre-dinner nibbley on a tray and a half portion on a plate.

The trick was to go to the booths to try to mix and match your food so it made sense, or so it didn't make sense. It was up to you. You were dealing with artistry. And you were your own personal artist, and your taste buds were the critics. And all could be washed down by maybe 80 different types of wine, all of which was served to you directly by the owners and employees of the wineries where the wine was made.

About an hour into this, it was apparent that among those booths with very long lines was LT Burger, the new restaurant in Sag Harbor. Imagine this! People come to a place and pay $225 VIP or $150 Regular to eat at the area's top restaurants, and they stand in line for a hamburger! Must be good. It surely was. There were other long lines, notably at Starr Boggs, Turtle Crossing, Sarabeth's and Pisco Porton, which served up drinks with rose petals in them.

The people parked in a giant lot, walked to the event, got the tickets that had their name on them at the door, and came into this evening of eating and drinking.

There were no tables under the giant tent at which to sit. There was a "living room" area way in the back created by Props for Today, where you could go and they had lots of couches and some tables there in the sunshine in the back where you could sit down—sort of a patio to the tent area—but for the most part, you walked around with a plate and spoon, ate and drank, talked to people, and then got something else. And, in the end, you knew you were helping with a donation to Have a Heart Community Trust and all the local food pantries.

Here's how it began. The crowd strolled in. The Greg Ruggiero Trio played, and our hosts welcomed our guests. Speeches were made by our host, Marcus Samuelsson from the Red Rooster Restaurant in Harlem, emcee Roseanne Scotto of "Good Day New York," and Mark Feuerstein from "Royal Pains," the TV show on the USA Network. At the end of this, I proposed a toast.

Then everybody went off to get something to eat.

In the end, leaving the event—there was an after party at Georgica—something occurred to me. Joanna Virello and her team at Manhattan Media had come up with the idea of the logo for the event, which consisted of two forks crossed and the words Dan's Taste of Two Forks superimposed over it. I had been looking at this logo for weeks and weeks. I thought they were crossed to symbolize the meeting of the Two Forks.

Now something else occurred to me. They were forks. For eating. Oh.

In the past, Dan's Papers has held events in the Hamptons—our Dan's Potatohampton running race, our Dan's Kite Fly, our Dan's Papers Best of the Best Party. And I would put one person in charge and the staff would volunteer and help out.

This was nothing like that. From the organizations I mentioned, there was a staff of 100—promotion people, security people,

DOWN IN THE TUBE

Naomi Watts was on the East Hampton platform Saturday at noon. We couldn't tell if she'd just got off or was waiting to get on. Our spotter had to pick up her daughter at the pre-school so could not stay to find out.

FLAGMAN DELAY

A delay of our service took place on Monday between 3 and 3:30 p.m. As many of you know, the Hampton Subway was originally built in 1932 by Ivan Kratz, and as an antique is listed on the New York List of Historic Places. Things cannot be changed.

Indeed, when three months ago, our token booths were deemed too uncomfortable for the token clerks because of the current epidemic of obesity sweeping the nation, we did have to replace the booths with larger ones, but they were the same otherwise right down to the last filigree, overhang and detail.

The same has been true with the Hampton Subway flagmen who work in the tunnels. Although other subway systems have long since installed red or green lights in the tunnels to tell the motormen to proceed or wait, Hampton Subway still uses the flagmen that were ordered up for this service in 1932. Not the same flagmen, of course, but the children and grandchildren of these flagmen. Now unionized, they get mighty good pay for what they do, which is wave either red or orange or green flags at the oncoming trains as the case may be. (These flags are hand sewn in a sweatshop in the Flatiron Building by immigrants just as they were in 1932.)

Anyway, last Monday at 3 p.m., a flagman between Southampton and Water Mill dropped his flag onto the tracks and then refused to go down to retrieve it, reporting that it had landed on the third rail. After being told that if that were the case it would have already burst into flames, he still declined to retrieve it. All service therefore came to a halt and for 25 minutes did not move, until the flagman foreman for the eastern service arrived and retrieved it with his pincers on a stick he uses for such purposes. The flagman, Harry McFarland, although of 22 years with the service, was promptly fired as well as he should have been.

MAN WITH A LANTERN STILL WANDERS

The old man with the beard, laurel leaf crown, white robe, sandals and lantern still wanders the system, last seen briefly at the eastern end of the Noyac platform. Any help by anybody will be a big help.

SUBWAY MOBBED IN BRIDGEHAMPTON

The Hampton Subway platform in Bridgehampton was mobbed with people at 11 p.m. last Saturday night as more than 1,000 attendees from the DAN'S TASTE OF TWO FORKS event in Sayre Park came down to take the subway home. For some reason, although they had eaten for four hours from booths run by 40 restaurants and 20 wineries at the event, they nevertheless, without paying, cleaned out the Subway Restaurant concession on the platform there thinking this must be part of the arrangement too. Hampton Subway is now in negotiations with Subway Restaurant to make restitution for the loss. Subway Restaurant has the contract to sell food on the subway platforms.

BOXING SCHEDULES ANNOUNCED

The summer "pushers," hired to keep the crowds moving onto the subway trains during rush hours have announced their upcoming boxing schedule. This tournament, approved by Commissioner Aspinall, will allow the pushers, who wear catcher's masks, chest protectors and boxing gloves, to burn off a little steam after their day's work.

The ring will be set up at the Hampton Bays headquarters building in the conference room there for a week while the pushers duke it out. Already there is controversy though. One pusher, 27-year-old Natasha Bulinsky, an immigrant from Russia, bragged to others that she has had seven professional fights in her home country during the last two years. Since

TWENTY SOMETHING

by David Lion Rattiner

On Saturday I was on bracelet duty at the Dan's Taste of Two Forks event in Bridgehampton, which was a huge success. Bracelet duty was extremely interesting to me. My days as the web editor of danshamptons.com are filled with having to please a lot of people on short notice. When it comes to Internet publishing, people expect things to go up online the second that they tell you about it, and because that is impossible, they are constantly annoyed about how "slow" you are at getting news online. Even when that involves putting up hundreds of pictures at a time, and doing research. It comes with the territory when you are an editor. And you have to develop a sort of superman-like ability when it comes to getting stuff online.

Being the bracelet guy at a major event in the Hamptons however, has a much different feel in terms of a job.

First off, everyone that approaches you looks completely desperate. Grown men dressed in suits look at you like you are their savior in life. "Are you the guy I'm supposed to give my ticket to for a bracelet? I have my ticket," they say with puppy dog eyes, desperate to get into the tent.

Bracelet hero

"I'm here for you buddy, let me see your wrist and we'll get you inside."

David Rattiner. Bracelet hero.

I felt really good when I could help them out so easily and quickly, and after about an hour, I became so fast at putting bracelets on people's wrists, I was impressing myself. I was like a bracelet ninja.

One of my biggest fascinations with putting bracelets on other people's wrists was how many women are unable to tolerate bracelets that were "tight." We were told to make sure that we put the bracelets on snugly so people couldn't easily take them off and then share them with an outsider who had not paid for a ticket, but I learned in a very short amount of time that there are a lot of women out there who feel like they are going to die if a bracelet is put on them too tightly.

"Okay ma'am, here is your bracelet, enjoy the party."

"OH MY GOD!"

"Ma'am, what is it?"

"It's so tight! Why is this so tight? Do you have scissors?"

This was kind of troubling, because on the one hand, I could see a watch and another bracelet on her other wrist fitted quite snugly around her wrist, while the bracelet I just put on could easily move up and down her arm. Was she trying to outfox me into putting on a bracelet not too tightly so she could pull it off and give it to somebody else? Possibly, but I couldn't know for sure.

"Ma'am, we'll cut this one off and I'll get you another one."

Then there were the people who you just couldn't please. One guy who had left his ticket at home and had to drive all the way back to get it was not happy when he came to me. "Everything's gonna be alright sir. You're here to have a good time, go and have fun."

And he nodded to me. "Thanks, pal."

I'm a pretty tall and a pretty big guy, so people are always kind of put off by my niceness. But the truth is that most big guys are nice, because we have to be. It's like being a pit bull, there are no second chances for you when you are a big guy and if you get angry it shocks and scares people. Ironically, big guys are always expected to be aggressive, and in the ancient days, this was probably true, but today, we've all learned that we have to remain calm.

Gina Glickman Giordan

"True Blood's Bauer: Under Exposed"

Move over George Clooney! Watch your back Daniel Craig! There's an actor on the brink of becoming Hollywood's next leading man!

HBO's "True Blood" Star, Chris Bauer portrays a drug-addicted sheriff whose image is anything but sexy. Bauer agrees, "They didn't write a guy that's a part time sheriff and full time body builder. He is a lonely, frustrated, emotionally confused authority figure, with some serious substance abuse issues.

According to Bauer most fans don't recognize him in real life, "I will talk to people who are "True Blood" fanatics and have seen every episode three times and it's 10 minutes into the conversation before they go, are you OMG are you Andy Bellefleur, you're the sheriff?"

Even Bauer admits his character's flaws are so dislikable they can take a toll on him personally, "It's challenging playing this role . My vanity wants to interfere. I want to be liked, like everyone else. And, it's a character who alienates and confuses people. Sometimes I feel like a loser when people think the character is a loser because I have a very porous, flimsy personality."

Yet, Bauer is not complaining about his non sex-symbol status, "I hit the jackpot for sure.

The "True Blood" star recently wrapped filming season four in L.A. and is currently enjoying a summer hiatus with his family in Sag Harbor. "We moved out here probably five years ago," said Bauer.

This past Saturday, "True Blood" fans had a chance to witness the sexier side of Bauer who co-hosted The Bay Street Theatre's "Rock the Dock" annual Gala with Blythe Danner and Richard Kind. Hundreds of VIP's including Liev Schreiber, Naomi Watts, Mercedes Ruehl, Fisher Stevens, Richard Kubick, Rob Florio, Robert Zimmerman, Chairman of the Board of Trustees Frank Filipo, Joanne Filipo, BST Executive Director Tracy Mitchell, Adrianne Cohen, BST founder and Artistic Director Sybil Christopher and Artistic Director Murphy Davis came out to support Bay Street's programming and enjoy the festivities on the Long Wharf in Sag Harbor. Bauer said his on stage experience last season performing live in Romance inspired him to get more involved with regional theatre and eventually join the board at Bay Street. "It was a great experience. I have to say the audiences at Bay Street Theatre were the most receptive, open, patient, giving, dignified group I think that I've ever done a show for. Bauer is also on board for the fifth season of "True Blood" set to premiere next summer. I politely coerced him into revealing anything about the upcoming season and asked, "You are the one character that has never been naked?" Bauer smiled, "Yes, I have not had to take my shirt off. I' m not the only one. But, I am one of the last few."

Well "True Blood" fans, I can say from first hand experience the real Bauer is nothing like his character, Andy. In person, Bauer has the charm and charisma that clearly doesn't translate on "True Blood." From the slick suit and tie to the orange tinted glasses, Bauer is leading man material all the way. Bauer admitted he is open to change in season five and joked, "Yes! Please give me more scenes, I've gotta make more of an impact." Bauer told me he wouldn't be opposed to showcasing his sexier side, "I think that if everybody wants to see what a 44 year old, white male looks like, I would be that guy. I am happy to be that guy." Clooney has nothing on Bauer and when I joked and said, "Fans just wanna know, do you have a six pack?" The modest man replied, "Right now, I'm just working on the two pack. It's getting bigger!"Six-pack or not, Bauer has got it made on and OFF screen. He truly has the qualities of a leading man including one very important characteristic, humility. When I ask him if he thinks he made it he throws the question back at me, "Do you really think I made it? Cause if you think that I've made it. Then I will think that I have." I replied, "Are you happy and fulfilled right now in your life? Bauer said, "Way beyond my wildest dreams." I said, "Then I say you've made it."

While Mrs. Schreiber was bidding on a silent auction item for her kids, a Children's Museum of the East End birthday party, hundreds of Hamptonites across island were feasting on East End fare from over 40 restaurants and 23 different L.I. wineries at The first annual Dan's Taste of Two Forks at

by Sally Flynn

To Bee or Not To Bee

There's a wonderful article in the Shelter Island Reporter this week, written by Carrie Ann Salvi, about the beekeeper, Alfred Brigham. He's keeping alive the tradition started by his grandfather, Alfred Kilb, of keeping the Island in honey products.

When I first moved back to the Island in September of 1997, I was already dreading the next summer because I suffered from allergic conjunctivitis, and when the goldenrod pollens blossomed in early August, my eyes would seal shut and have stabbing pains for the next four weeks. However, by good fortune, I met Chrystyna Kestler at that time and she shared a secret that changed my life, and I now pass it on to all the allergy sufferers out there.

If you suffer from allergies, take two teaspoons of local honey (processed as close to your home as you can get) a day. You are eating small amounts of processed pollen in the form of honey. Your body acclimates to the pollens after about five weeks and when you next encounter the pollens, your body will no longer fight them off and cause you all manner of misery. I was skeptical, but I tried it and it worked. I buy Brigham's honey all the time.

Just one warning—if you put a jar in your handbag, try to remember that it's there before you drop your handbag on the floor and unknowingly crack the jar. Because later that day, when you're on the ferry and you reach in to grab your wallet to pay your ticket, you could encounter a big surprise. Honey, particularly an entire spilled jar, seeps into every corner of your purse. I'll never forget the feeling of reaching my hand into a pocket of sticky goo to get my wallet out.

"Ms Flynn, I can't take this 20, it's dripping with honey."

"Think of it as a bonus—you can dip it in your coffee."

"No, Ms Flynn, I can't. Give me something I can hold until you come back later with dry money."

"Okay, here's my debit card, wait, it's stuck to my hair brush."

"Oh gross...what the hell?"

"I spilled a jar of honey in my handbag. Look, you can take my whole handbag, I'll just take my license and my debit card and find a place to wash them and bring you back the ferry fare."

"No way—honey is dripping from the bottom."

"Oh no! All over my pants. I gotta take these off."

"NO! Not here! Leave your pants on in the car. Look, I know where you live, just bring me the fare later."

"Ahhhh, that's so sweet of you..."

"Make sure it's clean and dry."

fast, kick as far or throw a ball in as quickly. But they just kept going.

And then I saw what it was about the Japanese that had resulted in their getting into this final by upsetting the powerful team from Germany. They were so alert. If the other team's positioning was just slightly off, they could fire the ball laser-like down the field in an intelligent and very terrific thrust. If a teammate was down there, there could be a shot on the goal. It wouldn't work, but they kept at it. They got shots that way.

It did put me in mind—this Japanese offense—of karate or Judo. There was this suddenness to it, a series of defensive parries preceding it, then, whammo. I think it is in their culture. They've always been smaller than their enemies. This is their reply.

Just before the half ended, one of these thrusts resulted in a quick goal. The Americans may have battered them and outshot them by a three-to-one margin, but they went to the sidelines for halftime with the score 1-1.

At the half, the commentators talked about the fact that in all of Japan, a land of 100,000,000 people, only 25,000 women play soccer. In America, a land of 300,000,000, about 30,000,000 girls and women play soccer.

There was talk about how lucky the Japanese girls were in this first half. There was talk about how with the physical beating they were taking they could not hold on forever. There was also talk about how wonderful it would be if the Japanese women brought home this championship to their damaged nation, so recently victim to earthquake, tsunami and nuclear breakdown all on one day.

As the second half began, I realized I was now rooting for them. I thought—what the hell is this? I thought—don't say a word. Don't ever tell anybody this. But I could not help myself rooting for them. They were like children, irrepressible, determined, confident and unflappable, and they went on and on and again they were losing.

The second American goal came midway through the second half. Again, it was inevitable. There were so many shots. It was bound to happen. So here the Americans were a second time, in the lead. Goals are so infrequent in soccer. This could do it for them.

During a time out, their coach urged them not to play for time, but instead go for a third goal. And boy they did try. But just before the match ended, there it was again—laser-like thrust by the little guys, right through the American defense, past the goalie and into the net. I leaped up and pumped my fist. Then I sat down to see what would happen next.

Time was winding down. Again the Americans pounded at the Japanese. And again and again the Japanese turned them away. At this point, with about 50 seconds left in the match, my wife came into the TV room and sat down.

"Oh I've seen this," she said. She was referring to the fact I was watching this on tape. "I know how it ends. The Japanese…"

"I DON'T WANNA HEAR THIS!! I shouted at her.

"Okay, okay," she said. And then she just sat quietly for a while and I thought—the end of that sentence, is it "lose?" or "win?" "Lose" doesn't sound right. Damn.

The game ended at 2-2, and as a result they had a shoot-out. This is where one team puts the ball down in front of the goal and one of their players tries to kick it with one big kick past the defending goalie. The teams would alternate. They'd each get five shots. The one with the most in the net wins. And if it's tied, it goes to sudden death. At this point, my wife left the room.

"I know how this ends," is what she said.

The sudden death was not necessary. The Japanese got their shots in. The Americans, not as often. So the Japanese won and everybody went wild. People were jumping up and down cheering. People were jumping up and down crying. Personally, after a while, I wiped away my tears and sat back down.

It was said that it will take years for the Americans to get over this loss. But they will. Life will go on.

As for Japan, we won!! We won!! We won!! Don't tell anybody I said that.

LOCAL POLITICS

by T.J. Clemente

The very essence of local politics was at hand this last Sunday in North Haven, where the Southampton Democratic Party presented "Summer Sunday, People, Politics and Prose." At this event, I was able to meet all six of the Democratic candidates up for election on the first Tuesday of November. Most astonishing was the fact that the Republicans, the registered majority of the Town of Southampton, have in fact decided not to offer any candidate to oppose current Southampton Town Supervisor Anna Throne-Holst.

The present Board, controlled by the Republicans, seems content with pulling the levers in Town politics without holding the top position, which they can do as a result of their present majority of three to two on the Town Board. Chris Nuzzi, one of the Republican Board Members, turned down the Republican Party's request to oppose Supervisor Throne-Holst, and instead chose to finish his four-year term on the Board rather than start a battle with Throne-Holst (who the Republicans demonize every chance they can in the press). As Congressman Bishop wondered out loud to the gathering, "What does this mean?"

The answers. I believe, are the following: 1. Throne-Holst must be popular, 2. She must be effective, 3. The next two years will most likely be difficult ones and she will be the face of tough decisions based upon the new Albany-mandated cap on the increase of property taxes of 2% (Southampton had a 5% cap), which means, in Throne-Holst's own words, "cuts of around $4-5 million from the 2012 budget."

Also on hand giving a brief talk was Steve Ballone, the Supervisor of the Town of Babylon and Democratic candidate for Suffolk County Executive. He is running a very well financed campaign, in fact he has nearly $2 million on hand for his campaign and Ballone's supporters have contributed $1.2 million since the last filing on January 15. These numbers represent record-breaking totals for a Suffolk County Executive race. Congressman Bishop praised. Ballone as "the right man at the right time." He noted that Ballone's opponent Angie Carpenter lags well behind in money raised, a telling sign, though Suffolk County has more registered Republicans than Democrats. After his talk, Ballone told me that he looks forward to utilizing his financial skills.

Also present were the two Democratic candidates for the Southampton Town Board, Brad Bender and incumbent Bridget Fleming, who is in fact running her third Town Board campaign in two years, having lost in November 2009 but winning in the special election in 2010 for the vacated Throne-Holst seat (when then-Southampton Board Member Throne-Holst defeated Linda Kabot and became Supervisor). Having had many chances to see the energetic Fleming campaign working hard and giving both concession and victory speeches, I promise that "there is no better campaigner" than Fleming. She is a strong advocate for the environment, bringing jobs into Southampton Town, and ending cronyism in Southampton Town government.

In my opinion, the most important race in terms of tipping the balance of power in Southampton Town may come down to first-time Townwide candidate for the Town Board, Brad Bender. He has spent the last five years with the Flanders, Riverside, and Northampton Community Associations and will need to be ready for this battle. The truth is that this will be the local Democrats' toughest race.

County Legislator Jay Schneiderman, also up for re-election, spoke briefly about how delighted he is to see political foe Steve Levy retire, and how hopeful he is that Steve Ballone will capture the Suffolk County Executive post. Schneiderman, according to experts such as New York State Assemblyman Fred Thiele, should win this election.

I also spoke privately with Congressman Bishop about the most recent attacks against him by Randy Altshuler, who has already announced that he will again run for the congressional seat in 2011. Bishop, after I read some of Altshuler's comments to him, asked the question, "When will Altshuler step up to the plate and actually make his position known instead of hiding behind his 'Creator of Jobs' mirage?"

These last two years have seen local governments across the country, as well as state and federal governments, facing tough times. Throwing stones at the glass house in not that hard, but fixing the broken windows with limited funds is part of the art of governing.

Aida Turturro
Actor

By Elise D'Haene

After seeing Montauk resident and actor Aida Turturro on Saturday at Dan's Taste of Two Forks, where she was looking tan and happy, and a vision of the relaxed, laid-back vibe of the fishing hamlet she resides in, we decided to catch up with her.

Those who have been conscious the last decade know that Turturro was a featured character in the groundbreaking HBO series "The Sopranos," in which she played Janice Soprano, the sister of the lead character New Jersey mafia king Tony Soprano, played by her longtime friend James Gandolfini. Here's a typical exchange between brother and sister from the show:

Janice: "There's a Zuni saying: 'For every 20 wrongs a child does, ignore 19.'"

Tony: "There's an old Italian saying: 'You fk up once, you lose two teeth.'"

Actually, Janice Soprano, as manifested through Turturro's brilliant acting, was one part shaman, one part witch and one part sociopath. Most of the men in her life ended up dead, one she killed, and out of family loyalty Tony has the man's body put through a meat grinder and disposed of. In an attempt to recover valuables from her dead mother's home, she steals the caretaker's prosthetic leg, vowing to keep it until she gets what's rightfully hers. She manipulates another man into marrying her, has a daughter, then subsequently attacks another mother at her daughter's Peewee soccer match. Like her brother Tony, Janice is prone to violence, is plagued with psychosomatic disorders and is a classic narcissist.

The Emmy-winning show is credited with forever changing the landscape of television programming, and for her work on it, Turturro received two Emmy nominations for Outstanding Supporting Actress in a Drama Series.

She was born on September 25, 1962 in New York City. Her father, Domenick Turturro, was an artist and her mother, Dorothy was a homemaker. Acting may just be an inherited trait in the Turturro family as her cousins John Turturro, Nicholas Turturro, and Natalie Turturro are all actors as well.

Before "The Sopranos," Turturro and Gandolfini had worked several times together, beginning with a Broadway appearance in A Streetcar Named Desire, with Alec Baldwin and Jessica Lange. In 1994, they appeared in the film Angie with Geena Davis and in 1998 they played detectives in the film Fallen.

> "Montauk is a very special place to me. I feel very lucky to be welcomed here."

Turturro studied theatre at the State University of New York at New Paltz, and soon after graduating in 1984, began landing roles on stage, in film and in television.

One of Turturro's passions is her dedication to educating the public about rheumatoid arthritis and diabetes, conditions she has. In an interview in Diabetes Health she talked about how she went through her own process of denial about the disease but came to a point in her life where she wanted to not just manage the disease but take charge of it.

In 1995, Turturro's performance in Denise Calls Up received rave reviews from the critics. In it she played an unsuccessful event planner. Later, Woody Allen cast her in his 1998 film Celebrity.

In an interview with Gurney's Ingrid Lemme on her VVH-TV "American Dream Show," Turturro said, "Montauk is a very special place to me. I feel very lucky to be welcomed here." The moment she says those words, she begins to cry, and explains that when you start to lose family members, it is so meaningful to be part of a place filled with people who care about each other.

She also talked about her companion, Buddy, a black Labrador. "Buddy has changed my life, helped get me to exercise more, and we walk on the beautiful beaches of Montauk. It's been wonderful. Montauk is such a great place for dogs. He walked in the Halloween parade. I put a hat on him! These are the beautiful things in life," Turturro said, "living out here, just the simple joys."

We couldn't agree more. Seeing Turturro at Dan's Taste of Two Forks with her infectious smile is also one of the simple joys of living on the East End with neighbors like her.

Opening on Friday, July 22, you can see Turturro in A Little Help, a film that also features Jenna Fischer and Chris O'Donnell. Set on Long Island, post September 11, in the summer of 2002, the film explores the strange and chaotic events in the life of a woman who is a dental hygienist.

10-MINUTE GOLF

by Darren Demaille

Recently I came across an article in The New Yorker, written by Larry David. It has inspired me to correct some of the misconceptions people, especially David, use while hitting a golf ball. In the article David makes light of common golf phrases such as, "you should hit down to make it go up," and "swing easy to make it go further."

David goes on to say that these phrases do not make common sense but they also do not work for him. Regardless of how comical the article was, it does poke fun at golf instruction and this is where I have to step in and defend my colleagues. This article is for you, Larry David, so pay attention and maybe you will reconsider playing the game blindfolded.

"Swing easier."

Swinging easier does not allow for a better swing, it just promotes a slower one. Tempos vary from player to player. Golfers like Ricky Fowler, for instance, swing the club faster from start to finish, while other golfers, such as Freddy Couples, swing the club more effortlessly. Many of my students have a fast-paced Manhattan lifestyle. Their tempo mimics their personality, unlike the smooth swing of David. One of the worst things a golfer can do is to try to swing with a tempo that is unnatural to him or her. In reality most golfers need to slow their thinking down and not their swing tempo. A better mental thought is to hit the ball as hard as possible while swinging the club with the correct rhythm. A good cue to correct rhythm is to say to yourself while swinging, "1 and 2." One represents the backswing and 2 represents the downswing. If you can keep your swing at that pace your chance of good rhythm will be close.

"Hit Down to Make it Go Up."

I am sure you have heard this phrase in golf instruction before, "you must hit down to make the ball go up." Golf is a game of opposites; in order for the ball to go into the air we must make a downward descent into the golf ball. According to David, every time he hits down on the ball all he does is chop up the course, swinging like he is splitting a log with an ax. I have never had much luck with the phrase, "hit down" and prefer to think that when you make a golf swing you need to make a ground swing. The thought of making a swing while clipping the grass makes more sense as a mental image. When I teach my students to make a ground swing, I paint a small chalk line in the grass and instruct them to make it disappear. This allows them to "hit down" without having to feel like they are chopping up the golf course.

Larry David's article is one of the funniest golf articles that I have read. It pokes fun at golf instruction and his obvious obsession with the game. Conceptually, David makes common sense of some of the most overused and, in his case, misunderstood golf phrases. Next time you hear someone telling their playing partner to, "hit down," or "swing easy" I am sure you will smile but you will understand what that really means.

Here is a link to Larry David's article. http://www.newyorker.com/humor/2011/07/04/110704sh_shouts_david

Town-owned roads. I pay Town taxes. Why is this happening? Because people living on a few roads in Noyac decided to call themselves "the Northampton Colony Yacht Club?" These are public roads!

Next Tuesday, a proposition is being put to the board to undo this No Parking situation. There are five councilmen. But for some procedural reason, to get something undone, you need four votes out of the five. As it stands, a Republican councilman, Chris Nuzzi, is dead set against repealing these restrictions. It may have nothing to do with it, but the Northhampton Colony holds big fundraisers for his political campaigns. Three of the other four councilmen say they support repeal. And so it all comes down to how the fourth councilperson, Nancy Graboski of Bridgehampton, who is just back from vacation, will vote. We hope she votes to repeal, to bring these signs down and return to the townspeople what a few would take away.

A Color Story to Inspire Decorating

It is truly magical how color can transform the interior design of a home. A jolt of the right shade can bring a room to life, and sophisticated layering of colors frames the architecture of a home well. Only too often the color scheme of a home becomes the afterthought of the design plan, rather than color setting the tone. I love it when my favorite paint companies introduce their new colors because they usually add onto their existing palettes. These new choices give us designers something new to work with on design projects. The paint companies conduct a great deal of research before launching their new color schemes, and with the ever-changing world of interior design, it is valuable to have cutting-edge products to work with.

Yesterday I shared a fun lunch at East Hampton's Babette's restaurant with my friend Christine Klotz, the Tri-State Lead Showroom Manager of Farrow & Ball, after attending the informative art show ArtHamptons in Bridgehampton. I was happy to see such a large turnout of high quality art from both local and international artists and galleries at ArtHamptons. The show took place in a farm field where the infamous Hampton Classic equestrian competition will set up in August. During our lunch, I was awestruck when Christine whipped the company's newly-launched nine exquisite colors out of her bag, which instantly took me to a crisp fall day, possibly in New England. The nine colors are rich and intense yet somehow mellow at the same time.

Farrow & Ball has piqued my interest because the company has deep roots firmly planted in history, placing a strong emphasis on quality craftsmanship that many in the art and design world appreciate. Made in Dorset, England, the paints have a wide array of colors and finishes. I often head to Riverhead Building Supply to pick up cans of this truly special paint. Because many of the colors seem historical in nature, it is a perfect complement to the homes in the area.

It does not surprise me to hear that Farrow & Ball has collaborated with artists and art organizations in the Hamptons because the company places a high value on the local artistic community. They were one of the sponsors of ArtHamptons, and this is part of an ongoing plan by the company to collaborate with artists. It seems the feeling is mutual, with many artists placing a premium on the quality of the paint. Last summer, local East Hampton sculptor James DeMartis worked with Farrow & Ball paint to repurpose one of his metal sculptures. Together with Farrow & Ball he unveiled the finished exhibit at events in both Farrow & Ball's New York City showroom and in James' working studio in Springs.

All of this color inspiration makes me want to run out, stretch a canvas and dip a brush into one of those rich new colors. Instead I will stick to the occasional furniture painting as my art form, leaving the genius works of art to the amazing and eclectic artists I saw at ArtHamptons last weekend. After studying Farrow & Ball's new color palette for a bit, I decide to repurpose a vintage dressing table and settled upon the new mossy green color as my color choice.

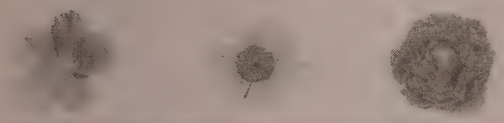
THE VIEW FROM THE GARDEN

Jeanelle Myers



This week I worked in a lovely small garden, the pride and joy of its owner. She had several older plant varieties and one was a perennial sweet pea on the fence. They make me think of my great-grandmother who also had one. Women, and certainly men, did not raise a lot of flowers where I grew up in Nebraska. Maybe the people did not have the time for them, or flowers were just too frivolous so the flowers that people had were special. Those sweet peas were that for me. They have no fragrance, like the annual sweet peas and come in only a soft lilac color, but they bloom all summer even in the heat of Nebraska and they come back every year!

She also had a trumpet vine (campsis radicans) and we loved to pop the buds. They are like tiny balloons but, of course, this destroys the possibility of a flower so, if caught, we were in trouble.

There are other people with a special flower that come to mind. My mother and her German Iris and my grandmother and the big block of peonies she brought from the farm to town when she moved. She and my grandfather had a vegetable garden but these peonies were the only flowers she had. Those and mom's iris were put into mason jars on Memorial Day and taken to the graves of family members.

My Aunt Helen had 4 o'clocks (Mirabilis jalapa) along the path to the milk house. She was a farmer's wife and raised a large vegetable garden and the 4 o'clocks were the only flower she grew. In the afternoon, their sweet fragrance mixing with all of the farm fragrances was like a treat for the day's work done.

My Aunt Freda had a small group of phlox by the gate and Aunt Amy always planted petunias and grew African violets in the house. Aunt Marvel had a small patch of portulaca and Mrs. Robinson had red geraniums by the front door. Mrs. Adams, across the street had no flowers at all.

Mrs. Warniky was the one who was known for flowers. She was a farmer's wife but she had a large bed of just flowers and people would go to visit her and the flowers. I remember the bed as a blur of color but distinctly remember white and tiger lilies. When she moved to town, she moved the flowers and had Mr. Warniky build a greenhouse room for her on the house. I never got to go into that room but I could see from the outside that it was regularly abloom.

The man who was my neighbor in Sag Harbor when we first moved here grew Chinese Lanterns (Physalis). In the fall, we picked them, stripped their leaves and dried them. He then gave small bunches to selected special friends. He had a vegetable garden and each year he and I would experiment with some garden challenge like raising melons on the fence or growing "the three sisters." He had a few other flowers but the lanterns were his special ones. They are so invasive that they are still creeping into my garden under the fence years after he has gone and I think of him fondly as I pull them out!

I know that small or even single-flowered gardens are special and precious to their growers. The garden does not have to be big or splendid to be treasured.

things were going and he said right on schedule. He expected to have it ready to harvest in the autumn of 1892. It would be ready in plenty of time for the Chicago World's Fair of 1893, scheduled to open in April of that year. The next autumn, however, Talmadge felt the potato still wasn't quite ready. When the promoters called him that fall to arrange for shipping he told them that he wanted to leave it in the ground for one more winter. He would have it out at the end of March, at the beginning of the thaw. He knew this was cutting things close and he knew the promoters would be panicky about this but he asked they trust him with it. They said they would. In late March of 1893, on a warm Monday morning, Talmadge went out to the edge of his field, kicked at the ground and said his potato was ready. He brought in six farmhands with picks and shovels and they labored for an entire day just to uncover the top of the potato. It was big all right. From end to end, it was a little more than 23 feet. The workmen dug for the rest of the week and into the next. By the following Thursday, they had dug all around the big potato and it was completely visible there, sitting free deep in a big hole. Half the townspeople of Springs came out that Thursday afternoon to have a look. How was Talmadge going to get that potato out of there? the people wanted to know. It was going to be a problem. Talmadge put ropes around the potato and tied them to a team of six horses. But the horses pulled and pulled and the potato would not move. They pulled all day until they were bathed in sweat. Nothing happened. That night, Talmadge got a brainstorm. In the morning, he asked for the strongest wagon in the village and he had it brought up to the big hole and then pushed down into it and arranged right next to the potato. Then he got a team of 12 horses, tied them with ropes to the potato and after 20 minutes of mighty pulling they had raised the potato up about seven feet, just high enough for Talmadge's men to push the wagon under it. And so that's how they got that potato out of there. The farmhands got behind the wagon with the potato on it, the team of 12 horses tugged on the ropes tied to the front of the wagon and they pulled that potato up the side of the hole in the ground, out into the pasture and down to the rocky beach there at the end of Fireplace Road. There the potato stayed. It took about 10 days for Talmadge to come to the conclusion that there wasn't a boat owner on eastern Long Island willing to try to haul that potato to Chicago. Finally, with nothing done, Talmadge called the promoters and told them he had the potato but he couldn't get it out of there. The promoters said they would take possession right there. Six days later, a big ocean-going ferry from Manhattan arrived off the coast of Fireplace and dropped anchor. Ropes were secured to the wagon, the wagon cranked out through the surf toward the ferry where, lo and behold, it was found that the wagon and potato floated! Then the tug towed it away. Nobody ever heard of the potato after that. And Talmadge never revealed what the promoters had paid him to grow this giant potato. But for years afterwards, every March, Talmadge would hand out big bonuses to his farmhands. It came, he said, from the annual check he was getting from Chicago. It was certainly quite a windfall for this community.

Eventually I got in line at Dylan's Candy Bar to shovel chocolate gravel into a bag. I also grabbed a huge lollipop and a bag of incredibly salty popcorn. I'm proud to say that the popcorn helped me STOP eating and most of the chocolate made it home to my freezer. I gave the lolly to a helpful store clerk the next day.

There was plenty of star power on hand but the focus stayed on the food and wine itself. Well-known chefs and winemakers in the flesh, pleased as punch to talk with every single attendee. This event worked. It really worked. I can't wait to see it and do it all again next year. Food, wine, friends, experts, dance music, lounge areas, goodie bags—let's hope we can work in a little shopping next time around—then we'll truly have it all in one place.

The Virasana-Hero Pose & Martha Stewart

By Rachel Abrams

Yoga is a time to turn your gaze inward and reflect. That is, unless the yogi next to you is someone famous. Like Martha Stewart-famous. Like Martha Stewart.

I'm no stargazer. When I see a celebrity, I say to myself, "Self, that's so-and-so. Don't stare." In fact, I look the other way and try to un-see the person. Except once, when I saw Jerry Seinfeld eating a burger a few tables away, and I texted my lunch companion across the table. "Dnt look, jri snfeld sttng bhnd u!"

But on a recent weekend morning at yoga, I found myself sitting cross-legged just a few feet away from Martha. My heart chakra started racing. Poor press and prison aside, I'm a fan of the brand she created three decades ago. I began my practice and regulated my breathing, but I struggled to gain focus. My body followed the sequence, but my mind was cut loose, attempting to communicate with Martha telepathically.

During Virasana–Hero Pose, "Martha, I know that color coordination is important to you (your Superneutral Bathroom Palette is to die for!)...so here's a tip: In the future, if you want to make sure that all five of your yoga props match, pick an orange mat, orange blocks and an orange blanket. This is because the bolsters and straps only come in orange. See those yogis across from us with blue mats, pink blocks and orange bolsters? They will never be able to meditate in polychrome."

Then the Utkatasana–Awkward Chair Pose, "Do you remember me, Martha? I temped at Martha Stewart Living back in 1996, just after college. I couldn't imagine my liberal arts degree going towards a better effort. Then one day, while I was working reception during my lunch hour, you called and were like, 'It's Martha, I need to speak with fill in the blank.' Still confused by the elaborate switchboard, I panicked, slapped some buttons, and accidentally disconnected you. (Sorry, Marth).But you called right back and said, 'It's Martha again,' in a voice that was less like your Velvet Chocolate Pudding and more like your Crackly Two-Tone Bark. I was just happy I got to talk to you twice!"

Next came Viparita Karani–Legs Up the Wall Pose, "Hey Martha, I'm looking to repaint our living and dining rooms, and it so happens I have some paint samples in my bag. If you're not rushing out after class to make a few hundred caramelized onion tartlets or something, would you mind giving me your opinion?"

The Vrksasana–Tree Pose, "I just have to share something fortuitous with you that I think you will appreciate as much as I do. I got married three years ago, and you'll be thrilled to know that I designed and crafted the invitations, decorations and flowers myself. And so–OMG, you won't believe this—I picked a filler flower for my bouquet named trachelium. I chose it for its vibrant green color and broccoli-like texture (BTW, I love your Composed Salad with Roasted Broccoli, Romaine, Chickpeas and Walnuts—so fresh!) and for how it offset the hot pink peonies that matched my pumps. Then—get this—on the day before the wedding, I noticed how the flower was spelled: Trachelium...it has my name in it!! What are the chances? Well, you garden, you would know."

Namaste, Martha. This class was an om come true.

Theatre Review: "Master Class"

By Gordin & Christiano

Tyne Daly is a miraculous triumph in Master Class, Terrence McNally's brilliant depiction of Maria Callas, the larger than life opera diva the world knew as La Divinia. After an acclaimed run at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. last year, Manhattan Theatre Club has brought the entertaining revival of the playwright's 1995 Tony Award-winning play back to Broadway, where Master Class opened on July 7, 2011 for a limited engagement through August 14. Daly, directed by Stephen Wadsworth, who put her through her paces as Clytemnestra in Agamemnon three years ago in Los Angeles, obliterates her blue-collar image—the stock and trade that has won her six Emmy Awards—by delivering a thrilling performance that becomes the imperious essence of the character at the center of Master Class.

Daly, although not exactly the image of the elegant jet-setting Callas, nonetheless astoundingly transforms herself into the aristocratic embodiment of the New York girl who became the darling of the opera world with her debut at La Scala in 1951. When Daly regally strides on stage, impeccably made up with a fantastic jet-black wig, wearing a chic black pantsuit and a Hermes scarf, she takes your breath away. As the evening builds, Daly, a consummate actress, continues to electrify with her power, presence and startling sense of truth. You really believe she was once the overweight greasy girl that Callas was in her youth determined to gain revenge. With precision timing she hilariously mangles the student's names and continually interrupts them with instructions on how to listen. i

The play is set in a classroom at Julliard in the mid-1970s, where Callas actually taught a master class a few years before her death in 1977 at 53. McNally's depiction pays homage to the opera legend and was apparently inspired by the transcripts from these sessions, taking some of the dialogue about art directly from them. But by allowing the legendary soprano to drift off into her burning memories while critiquing the three students, McNally shows us details of Callas' battles with poverty, weight, her rivals and her tragic love affair with the Greek shipping tycoon Aristotle Onassis, who discarded her for Jackie Kennedy.

If there is any shortcoming in the production by Wadsworth, a director with an extensive opera background, it is a lack of specificity and nuance from the other actors. As a result, the evening shows off the shortcomings of the schematic play and the talented actors portraying the students come off as little more than foils for the dominating Callas instead of fully fleshed-out characters. The gifted performers in these roles are Sierra Boggess, Garrett Sorenson and Alexandra Silber, and while their work serves the evening the nuance needed to allow their interactions with Callas to sizzle is often missing.

In reality, however, McNally's take on Callas is a fabrication that borrows heavily, not only on Callas, but incorporates aspects of other famous sopranos. Because of this, many actresses—including Patti Lupone, Dixie Carter and Faye Dunaway—have played the role successfully by capturing the qualities inherent in the text. Zoe Caldwell, who originated the role, gave the definitive interpretation, because mixed with her flamboyant fierce pride wrapped in layers of affected sophistication was also a fragility that was startling. To be fair, Daly's portrait, although extremely vulnerable, is a tough survivor, and she makes the role uniquely her own. Her ego rises above her generosity of spirit, making her Callas an unforgettable monster.

Master Class is now playing at Manhattan Theatre Club's Samuel J. Friedman Theater, 261 West 47th Street, between Broadway and Eighth Ave. For tickets or more information call 212-239-6200 or visit www.manhattantheatreclb.com.

One of the key players in Gateway is Marian Illitch (founder of Gateway Casino Resorts LLC), whose husband Mike founded Little Caesars Pizza and now owns the Detroit Tigers baseball team and the Detroit Red Wings hockey team. Marian Illitch supported the Shinnecocks during their efforts to gain federal recognition last year. She also helped the Los Coyotes Band of Cahuilla and the Cuperio Indians develop casinos in Barstow, California.

Another part of the presentation was a pledge to renovate the Long Island Rail Road station near the track. There is also the hope of increased train service to the site.

The bottom line is that the drumbeat of the coming Shinnecock Casino is getting louder and stronger. Given Marian Illitch's skill and success at navigating through local and federal government regulations, it is only a matter of time before something rises in the form of a Shinnecock Casino on Long Island. Afterwards one can only guess how the Shinnecock Nation will use its new wealth on the reservation in Southampton. There is no doubt that by the end of the decade, this local tribe's influence on the East End will be very different than it is today.

The fights will begin on Saturday after the evening rush, at 9 p.m. on August 6.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

I am very concerned about this apparently homeless man in a white robe who is wandering around aimlessly in our tunnels with a lantern. Could he sue us? Do we have fire insurance? What if he steps on the Third Rail? If he does, what do we do with the body? Nobody has claimed him during the last eight days. Hopefully he'll go away.

OVER THE BARREL

A Visit to Waters Crest Winery

1,000. That's how many cases of wine – give or take – Jim Waters makes at his winery, Waters Crest Winery, every year. That's small, very small. Wolffer Estate Vineyards makes more than nine times that – just in its rose program.

Waters' tasting room is small too, tucked into an otherwise non-descript industrial plaza on Route 48 in Cutchogue. It's a location that is easy to drive right by and easy to miss. But make the effort to visit, and you'll be rewarded. Most days, you'll find Water in the tasting room – which is mere feet from the garage-sized winery itself. His enthusiasms for wine, winemaking and the local wine community are infectious and despite the winery's small production, he's amassed quite a following – including nearly 400 wine club members.

Waters Crest isn't just about its owner. That wine club isn't a mere cult of personality. There are some standout wines in the surprisingly diverse portfolio. Here are some favorites from my visit last weekend:

Waters Crest Winery 2010 Rose ($24) is a blend of Merlot, Sauvignon Blanc, Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc and Chardonnay and it very well may be the best Waters has produced. Driven by strawberry and watermelon flavors, there is also a welcome zing of lemon-grapefruit and a subtle sprinkling of sweet herbs. There is a bit of creamy weight on the mid-palate, but it's balanced very well by citrusy acidity. A beautiful and no-doubt versatile rose.

Another standout was the Waters Crest Winery 2010 Sauvignon Blanc ($23) made with fruit grown at Palmer Vineyards. The fruit character here is tropical and dominated by passion fruit with understated grassy-hay notes and gentle, but present, acidity.

For the second year in a row, Waters purchased Riesling from Wagner Vineyards on Seneca Lake to make his 2010 Dry Riesling ($20) – with good results. Though still a bit taut and ungiving, it shows slate and flint qualities backed by sweet lime and subtle peach fruit character. It is dry with fresh, but soft, acidity. Another three to six months in the bottle will help lengthen the finish and unravel the flavors.

On the red side of things, the real star was the Waters Crest Winery 2007 Cabernet Franc "Grand Vin" ($40). Ripe and intense on the nose, it shows aromas and flavors of black cherry and crushed blackberry with an intriguing earthy edge and sweet oak notes. Some 2007 reds – because of the hot, dry season and extended maceration – need time to soften. This one is ready to drink today. It has everything cab franc lovers are looking for.

SIMPLE ART OF COOKING

by Silvia Lehrer

Marcus Samuelsson, award-winning chef, restaurateur and cookbook author, was born in Ethiopia and grew up in Sweden where he attended the Culinary Institute in Gothenburg. On Saturday, July 16, Samuelsson hosted the notably successful Dan's Taste of Two Forks benefit for East End food pantries.

This attractive young man has literally traveled the globe in his quest to become a world-class chef, which he has undoubtedly accomplished. From working in a Michelin three-star restaurant in France, to going from port to port on a luxury cruise ship, he learned the culture, the cuisine and the diversification of flavors of the many places he traveled. For him it all came together in New York City when he apprenticed at Acquavit Restaurant (where at age 24 he became executive chef and co-owner), and was exposed to myriad of tastes right here in Manhattan, U.S.A. Samuelsson loves to play and interplay with ingredients and his exposure to the vastness of cuisine in the United States led to his most recent cookbook, New American Table (Wiley, 2009).

Marcus Samuelsson has contributed much to the culinary world. In 1999 he won the James Beard Foundation award for Rising Star Chef and in 2003 he was named Best Chef in New York City. In 2009 he was guest chef at a presidential state dinner, and in a 2010 TV competition called "Top Chef Masters" he was crowned winner, earning $115,000 for UNICEF's grassroots efforts.

Come and meet this singular young man on Saturday, July 23, when Samuelsson will again visit the East End as a participating chef in the James Beard Foundation 20th Annual Chefs and Champagne event at Wölffer Estate Vineyard in Sagaponack.

HAMPTONS EPICURE

Stacy Dermont

The Inside Skinny on Dan's Taste of Two Forks

Last Saturday the East End celebrated its food culture in style with a selection of dishes and wines from over 60 top restaurants and wineries under one huge tent at the first annual Dan's Taste of Two Forks at Sayre Park in Bridgehampton.

Here are some of my personal highlights from this mega food event:

Marcus Samuelsson's outfit—100% vintage Erkel.

Sarabeth Levine told me she'd recently set her hair on fire.

I saw a well-dressed woman lick her plate off.

When I looked down and saw a purple stain of unknown origin across my cardigan I thought, "Well, now it's a party!"

I met winemaker Tree Dilworth's (of Comtesse Therese) mom. She's the coolest—you can see her working the vines on the Comtesse Therese website.

A fan told me that for her, reading my restaurant reviews "makes her feel like she's right there."

That was my favorite moment among many high points. Then a guy came up and asked me what a "Hamptons Epicure" is. I loved it.

There was plenty of Pellegrino.

Here's what people always ask me for—highlights of what was in the event's goodie bag –

Judy Carmichael's latest compact disc, Come and Get It.

Some T-Salon tea.

A Bideawee wine glass. Odd, but kinda cute.

Copies of Opinionated About U.S. Restaurants 2011 by Steve Plotnicki AND the Zagat Long Island Restaurants 2011/12, Including Hamptons Hot Spots and a Listing of Noteworthy Wineries.

Four black pin-back buttons promoting "A-List New York," which urges everyone to watch something on television on Monday, July 25 at 10 p.m.

A DropStop from L'Aventure Languedoc "for pouring wine without spilling a drop"—for people who don't drink it from the bottle, I guess.

A royal blue spatula from Gilt City.

DashaWellness Vanilla Lip Balm (with SPF 15 for Hamptons lip protection).

Discount tickets for all kinds of services.

Two forks.

I'll admit that I was hoping to find a full bottle of Pisco Porton in there. The celebs got Pisco in their bags. Maybe next year…I am shopping a book around…

I'm taking a Jitney pointed toward the Fingers Lakes for the weekend. I'll be sure to report back on what the foodies and "winies" upstate are up to these days.

that you don't have to make an elaborate dish to get elaborate flavors.

Makes 16 pieces
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon harissa*
Sixteen 1/2-inch watermelon cubes (3/4 cup)
1 tablespoon olive oil
1/2 cup cubed feta cheese (1/2-inch cubes)
8 thin slices prosciutto, cut lengthwise in half
16 small mint leaves
8 pitted kalamata olives, halved

1. Sprinkle the salt and harissa over the watermelon cubes in a medium bowl. Set aside for 10 minutes.

2. Heat the olive oil in a medium sauté pan over high heat. Add the watermelon cubes and sauté for 1 minute. Turn and sauté for another minute. Remove from the heat and transfer to paper towels to drain excess oil. Let cool.

3. Place a cube of feta on top of each watermelon cube and wrap with a piece of prosciutto. Garnish with a mint leaf and an olive half and secure with a large toothpick.

Can be made up to an hour in advance. Serve at room temperature.

*Harissa is a fiery red pepper paste from Tunisia. Premade harissa can be found at African and Middle Eastern markets, upscale supermarkets, or online.

Restaurant Review: Muse

By Stacy Dermont

I've long known that Muse in Water Mill is named "Muse Restaurant, Aquatic Bar & Lounge" because its bar is made of all-glass fish tanks. You have to see this. Don't picture guppies, imagine starfish and colorful underwater features. It is quite something.

It's easy to find Muse—it's located within the foodie Mecca, the Shoppes at Water Mill, at Water Mill's only traffic light.

Chef/owner Matthew Guiffrida is also a partner in the new Avanti Gourmet Market just across the courtyard.

There was lively live music being played when we arrived at Muse. Specials included a Spanakopita Pop Tart with sundried tomato icing which tempted—but I opted for Muse's "Economy Gastronomy" $29.95 Prix Fixe—but first, cocktails. I ordered a Pink Passion Muse-tini (Absolut Raspberry Vodka, St. Germain, Malibu Rum, pineapple juice, grenadine with a Champagne floater), which offered a sweet kick. My husband enjoyed a martini, which he judged to be appropriately dry.

I started with "the soup of the moment," Carrot and Ginger. This was a harbinger of good things to come. I could have had a bucket of this smooth savory soup and left happy. Muse is a flexible place to eat—it offers "Customized Vegetarian Selections" and many menu items are noted as being gluten free.

The Muse Wine List offers bottles from around the world as well as Long Island's Palmer Vineyards.

Husband started with the Tuna Ménage—tuna three ways. He did not share, commenting, "Mmm. Mmm."

Our son got rolling with a BLT Wedge. It's a chunk of iceberg lettuce, applewood smoked bacon and grape tomatoes with a marsala Gorgonzola vinaigrette. He was enraptured and commented, "How cool is this presentation?" Then it was gone.

I was very pleased to find "Chicken n Waffles" on the menu. There was no written description—this just made it more intriguing. I sensed that it was made for me. It was. Crispy waffles framing chicken confit. Gravy and maple syrup in the same dish?! Heck yes! No doubt the greens make it 100% healthy.

Husband ordered the South of the Border Atlantic Salmon. Pan seared salmon Scaloppini alongside Ten Bean, Charred Corn and Avocado Salad over Grilled Artichoke Salsa with Arugula Gazpacho Salad. The only thing this dish doesn't have is gluten. The house Sauvignon Blanc helped him to eat it all up.

Teenage Boy scored with his 3 Little Pigs: 1. Pulled Pork with maple syrup spiked mustard on a charred scallion Johnny cake. 2. "Xxxtra" thick homemade bacon over pimento and cheddar oatmeal. 3. Teriyaki braised pork belly on apple onion stir-fry. A triple celebration of the porcine. Again there was no sharing.

Husband drank his heated dessert of Courvoisier as usual.

Teenage Boy naturally went for the "Are You Ready for S'More." Double Chocolate Mousse and Graham Cracker French Toast topped with a Torched Homemade Marshmallow. You have to see this marshmallow to believe it. Teenage Boy defined it as "pretty badass." He went on to wax uncharacteristically loquacious and exclaimed, "This thing is awesome! That's French toast right there. It's French Toast. That's Chocolate and French Toast. Totally awesome, it's like a Graham cracker." And with that the s'more was no more.

We thought we were done but Chef Guiffrida insisted on sending out some of his grandmother's Zeppoli. We were glad that he did. These little fried doughnuts are HOT and delish. Dipped in caramel sauce, they are quite the "icing on the cake."

There's truly something for everyone at Muse in Water Mill. Enjoy it, take all your friends with special dietary needs, or your special friends, or both. Go with the flow at the bar or in the dining room. Chef Guiffrida rightfully stated, "We're proud of everything."

Restaurant Review: Turkuaz Grill

By Arianna Johnson

On the Peconic River, right behind Main Street in Riverhead, is Turkuaz Grill, a Turkish restaurant that opened recently. This quaint little place is not easy to find, but if you walk behind the Long Island Aquarium and Exhibition Center (previously known as Atlantis Marine World), you can't miss it.

A. Johnson

This lovely restaurant has picnic tables set right on the bank of the river, as well as six tables inside. The interior is brightly decorated with whites and blues, accented by paintings done by the proprietor and her sister—but the food is what really brings this place to life.

After I was seated, I was given a sample plate of different dips served with homemade bread, which was warm and crisp on the outside, soft on the inside. To start off, I tried the hummus, which was very creamy and had a kick from the paprika sprinkled on top, as well as a crunch from pine nuts. The baba ganoush was smooth and had a distinct eggplant and tahini flavor. If you're looking for a more acidic-tasting eggplant dip, try the eggplant salad with roasted tomatoes and peppers. Finally, there was a single grape leaf that had a pleasantly surprising tomato punch to its rice filling.

When I completed my appetizer, I was brought another sampler, this one with meats and grains. I first went for the juicy Turkish meatball, made of lamb and herbs. It was tender, flavorful, and not at all dry. There were also a few pieces of chicken and beef shish kabob that had a lovely marinade. To go along with this tasty selection of meats, I was given a buttery rice pilaf and tomato bulgur, which appeared gummy but was actually quite tasty and did not stick to the roof of my mouth. Just when I thought I was finished with my main course, an entire spinach pizza was brought to my table. The "pizza" was made on a flat bread-type crust with a Spanakopita-like filling. I had two pieces, it was so good, and it definitely reminded me of Spanakopita.

At last, dessert came out. Truthfully, when I first entered Turkuaz I saw the display of baklava and couldn't wait to try it, so when it was served, I was in heaven. The pistachio baklava came in two little cigar rolls, drizzled with chocolate sauce. As soon as I cut into it the honey oozed out and that was exactly the taste that filled my mouth—pure, sweet honey. The phyllo was flaky and the chocolate sauce was light but decadent. A strong Turkish tea accompanied my sweets, which was not bitter, just more powerful than the teas I am accustomed to.

When most people hear the term "Turkish cuisine" they are scared because they don't know what it really means. But it is simply healthy Mediterranean food, not too different from what one might get at a Greek restaurant. So have an adventure and discover the hidden wonders Turkuaz Grill has to offer—you won't be disappointed.

Turkuaz Grill, 40 McDermott Avenue, Riverhead. For more information, call 631-591-1757.

SHOP 'TIL YOU DROP

with Maria Tennariello

The season is in full swing; the shops are filled with visitors and locals alike. The push this season is jewelry, the chunkier the better, and I am finding such beautiful collections available at affordable prices, especially in the trunk shows. Let's shop!

On Thursday, July 21, 4 to 6 p.m., there is a Ramy Brook "Trunk Show" happening at Edit, 28 Jobs Lane, Southampton. Ramy Brook is a luxurious lifestyle brand defined by sexy, wearable pieces that can take women from daytime to evening. She offers sleek, stylish and high-quality designs that are as chic by themselves as they are when combined with other pieces. Look for glam silk tops and ultra-feminine crepe dresses to charmeuse jumpsuits (remember them?) and flirty rompers. Each design is effortlessly chic with a 70s-inspired twist. 20% of the proceeds are donated to WIZO. Look for Ramy Brook at Super Saturday Designer Market on Millstone Road, July 30. Stay tuned for more information on my very favorite shopping experience, Super Duper Saturday.

Let's wish Judith Leiber a "Happy 90th Birthday" with a showing of a great collection of her bags in the garden at Collette Designer Boutique, 22 Main Street, Southampton, Sunday, July 24, 1 to 3 p.m. There will be a great collection of Judith Leiber bags as well as a book signing with Jeffrey Sussman, author of the designer's memoir, No Mere Bagatelles, making it a true celebration of her birthday. Do stop in and enjoy some refreshments and light fare with Ava and her staff.

Looking for the infamous Ms. Tracy Tooker? Well I just found out, after an extensive search for her as requested by some of my readers, that she is gearing up for Polo, Hampton Classic and major events by showing her hats at Stitch located on Nugent Street, Southampton. Stitch is a great source for handmade women's clothing and accessories. Top that with a Tooker hat, and you're all set to go.

Even your very own celebrity pooch can strut their stuff while shopping in the villages on the East End, wearing their Douglas Paquette's designer dog collars and leashes that are now available at the Olde Town Animal Hospital, 380 County Road 39A, Southampton. There is a unique collection of pieces in all sizes and colors that are just perfect for any event, even the Hamptons Dog benefits. Mix and match your best friend with what you are wearing, the newest fad that is becoming

BELLA'S PICKS

Christopher Obetz

Old and New Friends

What an amazing week. Bella continues to hang out with old and new friends and devote herself to the Southampton Animal Shelter. She tries to make sure that her past is a part of her present. Bella loves her tried and true friends, but she is always open to possibility.

In reality, animals and people all must be open to possibility: nothing is perfect. One must try and explore, give life a chance: make new friends and grow. That said, when I got off the train this evening, I couldn't wait to tell Bella about last night…I went to an unexpected party, hosted by Jonathan and Somers Farkas, at Le Cirque.

It quickly turned into a fun BlackBerry moment. Not knowing the guests on my right or left, I broke the ice with an image of Bella, the Southampton Animal Shelter Foundation girl, and her new best friend, Bibi, a 3-month-old golden puppy. I told Bella that what really makes an evening special is when you learn, have the chance to meet someone you've never met before, catch up with someone you haven't seen in a while, and just maybe even find a way to reach out and help.

Sharing family animal photos gave me the chance to talk about the Shelter and introduce, to what turned out to be a table of animal lovers, the story behind the Shelter, its mission and importance in our community.

What brings people together more than animals and food?! Not much...and the combination leads to many cheery faces and an open collaboration on why having one, two, three or more animals in your life makes a difference. Perhaps even more, like Rick and Kathy Hilton, who are over-the-top animal lovers, have.

Kathy, who had just come in from Los Angeles after filming "The World According to Paris," was as relaxed as ever and is always a delight to see. I told Bella, those Hiltons are hard working girls...maybe you can get a play date with Tinkerbell and tell her about the Southampton Animal Shelter and share some ideas for the West Coast. Maybe you could even invite her to the beach for one of your favorite walks.

Rick then brought out photos of his treasured cat Tiger. As Bella has two cat sisters and a brother, she was excited to hear that they also have a complete animal family. What really thrilled Bella was when I told her that the Hiltons (kids and all) are parents to a parrot, Sammy, and even more cats and dogs who they also revere.

What fun we all had as BlackBerries and iPads went around the table, and stories were told. It was so much fun! All of the sudden, we were sharing the loves of our lives: our cats, dogs, turtles and even an osprey. It was truly a night I will never forget.

What is so special is that Bella is the connector—a Golden Girl, now aging, but so loved. She brought a table together in a way no on else could.

It made me reflect on how she has been there for me and our family since day one; tried, true and devoted. Far more than a loyal companion—a true love and a giver.

Watching the joy at the table as everyone easily

Rose, Bella, and Christopher exchanged and showed off their images of their animal friends was so touching. I witnessed a room opening up to old and new acquaintances connecting through their animal friends.

I wished Bella could have been there to be a part. She was in her own special way! Now, when I get off the train, I will tell her the same story and celebrate her for what she has given our family and how she has taken me to new levels of understanding, love and reminding me to constantly share.

If you all have a chance, please come to the Shelter and find a friend...It could and will change your world. Then invite some friends to dinner and pass your animal photos around. I promise something positive will happen for an animal in need and people who once didn't know each other will find a way to connect and change their lives.

It's time for a swim in the sea...

In advance, many thanks for all of you who helped make Unconditional Love a HUGE success for the Shelter.

A new store, Wampum Skate Shop, 2487 Main Street, a skate shop and lifestyle clothing store has recently opened in Bridgehampton. It blends high-end fashion with the skateboarding culture that has been so prominent over the last few years. Here, they choose skate brands that they like and support, and carry clothing from all around the United States. Owners Marley and Lennon Ficalora (brothers) grew up spending half the year in Montauk, and half in Olympia, WA. Lennon is one of the best skateboarders in the Hamptons, and was the first local kid ever to be invited to compete in the Van's Warp Tour National Skateboarding Competition. They have brought together a "mix of brands from all over the country that you will not see anywhere." The store is located behind their mother's Main Street Helen Ficalora jewelry store. Kicking off summer, the launch of Audrey & Emma, LLC offers luxury handbag liners designed specifically for the protection of Louis Vuitton and Longchamp handbags. The company's environmentally friendly line of products, as well as the packaging, is exclusively made stateside with recycled materials, and a portion of each sale will go directly to the Audrey Hepburn Children's Fund. Available in a variety of colors and designs, Audrey & Emma's liners are laser-cut to precisely fit the Louis Vuitton Speedy 30, the Longchamp Le Pliage 12", and the Le Pliage 10". The patented design tucks under the bag's hardware, providing a protective barrier and consistent fit. Regardless of what's inside, the liners ensure that the bag retains its shape, while at the same time protecting the inside from everyday debris. House & Home guide

Several Rooms with A Panoramic View

By Kate Maier

Would-be second home owners who pooh pooh the idea of hiring a pool boy can snap up oceanfront property in Montauk for mere millions – $2.5 to $6.5 million to be exact – at the Panoramic View on Old Montauk Highway. Since the luxury development company Distinctive Ventures snapped up the property in 2007, a rapid transformation has turned cramped hotel rooms into spacious bi-level living spaces overlooking the Atlantic, and all the amenities are included.

So far 10 units have been sold, with 10 more on the block, and owners who have discovered the Panoramic way are reaping the benefits of full-service resort living without the hassle of maintenance.

Real estate broker Ed Bruhel, who has been busy selling off units like hotcakes as banks have relaxed into post-recession, second-home financing, implied that Panoramic neighbors like Robert DeNiro and Ralph Lauren have gotten the short end of the stick by purchasing homes they have to manage themselves.

"Bernie Madoff's house was two over from here and that sold for $9.4 million. That's 3,000 square feet and that's a lot of work," said Bruhel. At the Panoramic, "[owners] show up, we fill the fridge, we have housekeeping, we clean the car, we do the dry cleaning, we meet the plumber…everything's easy."

Nestled on 10 acres with 1,000 feet of beachfront, the residences boast some of the best views on the East Coast. While the beachfront is sparsely spotted with umbrellas (De Niro's are yellow, a few hundred yards to the right), residents are entitled to "all the amenities of a resort – cabanas, chair services, towel services," said Bruhel.

For those who would rather not get sand on their feet, a newly renovated pool shares the same striking view. There is also a fitness center, slated to undergo its own facelift as the Panoramic transformation continues and more quaint and cozy hotel rooms are turned into turn-key residences.

Viking appliances, Bosch dishwashers and Sub-Zero refrigerators, remote-controlled fireplaces, high-definition cable, and top-of-the-line sound systems are all part of the package, Bruhel explained. Each unit's hot tub is situated on a private deck overlooking the Atlantic, attached to furnished-to-order bedrooms. The Distinctive team provides the ultimate in concierge service, and if owners are out of town, "we can rent if for them, for a month or longer."

According the Bruhel, buyers are most captivated by the view. "The quality is shocking, but the beachfront is really unparalleled. There's no 65-foot elevation anywhere [for sale in the Hamptons]. It really is dramatic, but the service is the touch where they can't believe that it's this good."

Potential buyers who want to check out the residences can swing by the resort on Old Montauk Highway, where Bruhel can show them around. Not ready to part with your millions just yet? Resort rentals are soon to be renovated as well – check out www.distinctiveventures.com on the Web for details.

Designer Houses & Heavenly Gardens

By Sharon McKee

The 2011 Hampton Designer Showhouse

Last year I attended the Hampton Designer Showhouse benefiting Southampton Hospital—twice. The first time I went solo, but there was so much to see that I returned a week later with my favorite contractor. It's always a lot to take in, a real feast for the senses of design junkies like us.

The 2011 Hampton Designer Showhouse in Bridgehampton

The Hampton Designer Showhouse, now in its 11th year, has become a premier showcase for America's top design talent. This season, approximately 25 A-list interior designers and decorative artists have taken on an enormous shingle-style house in Bridgehampton and turned it into a magazine-worthy masterpiece, one room at a time. The Showhouse, located at 1224 Scuttle Hole Road in Bridgehampton (north of the traffic circle), will have a six-week run, kicking off with a sneak peek preview party on Saturday night.

You can easily get lost in the splendors of the Hampton Designer Showhouse for at least a couple of hours, visiting the eclectic rooms, studying the designers' materials and strolling the grounds and "outdoor rooms." Last year I enjoyed ending my self-guided tour with a stop at the on-site Showhouse boutique.

Legendary interior designer Mario Buatta is serving as Honorary Showhouse Chairman, and interior designers Jamie Drake and Alexa Hampton are the Honorary Design Co-Chairs. All three luminaries of the home design world will attend the Gala Preview Cocktail Party on Saturday, July 23, from 6 to 8:30 p.m. The Showhouse itself will be open for six weeks, from Sunday, July 24 to Sunday, September 4, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

2011 Hamptons Designer Showhouse, presented by Traditional Home magazine and benefiting Southampton Hospital, 1224 Scuttle Hole Road, Bridgehampton. Admission $30, including an official 2011 Hampton Designer Showhouse Journal. Tickets may be purchased at the door or in advance at www.hamptondesignershowcouse.com. No admission 30 minutes before closing. No strollers, infants, children under 6, or pets are admitted. Gala tickets are $225 each. For more information call 631-745-0004.

And don't miss...

Go Condo Green at Shinnecock Canal

By Arianna Johnson

Over the past decade "going green" has become the "it" thing to do – from recycling and bringing reusable bags to the grocery store to buying a hybrid car and putting solar panels on the roof. Now it's not just about finding small ways to make your house more energy efficient with light bulbs or appliances, it's about having a "green" house, period. That is what Lee Passavia of The Domus Group is trying to accomplish.

A graduate of Yale University, where he studied art and architecture, Passavia found a "spectacular" location overlooking the Shinnecock Canal to build his green townhouses. He discovered this hidden gem of a locale when he was told that it had become something of an eyesore to the neighbors. On top of this hill were several old, broken-down summer cottages, that used to be a hotspots for parties, but were unfortunately abandoned and left in disrepair. So Passavia decided to turn a negative into a positive by taking his green initiative to the Hamptons.

Passavia thought that this location was perfect because of its view overlooking Shinnecock Bay and its direct access to the ocean. It's a natural hub for the Hamptons, with easy access to Southampton Village and the ocean beaches. Plus it's not too far away from Manhattan.

His goal was to bring high-end townhomes, which are "tastefully done," to an area with multi-million-dollar homes at a much more affordable price point. The townhomes are now called Canoe Place Landing.

The Domus Group itself is strictly focused on building energy efficient homes and they pride themselves on staying at the forefront of the green building movement. It has taken time for green development to catch on in the general marketplace, but those who currently use such technologies are very satisfied. The biggest obstacle in selling green systems has been that they cost more than older technologies up front. With the economy the way it is, people are less inclined to put down more money at the start. But green systems save consumers a great deal of money over time and so are being recognized as a great investment.

Compared to a home built to the state code minimums, the Domus' design will reduce heating and cooling energy use by about 40%. Among the advanced technologies used in the homes are high-density spray foam insulation, a heat recovery ventilator that captures heat from outgoing stale air and ensures the home receives ample fresh air, rigid exterior insulation to reduce thermal bridging and special attention paid to air-sealing walls, ceilings and ductwork. Anyone who is invested in reducing their carbon footprint should definitely look into this type of housing.

The good news is that this is already catching on in the Hamptons. The solar thinking and Energy Star requirements in Hamptons villages is forcing people to be more environmentally aware. The group thinks that once people see this cutting-edge development, they will become more interested and the competition will have to keep up. The company is in the process of becoming part of the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) and Energy Star certified in order to show that these townhouses are livable and efficient.

The Domus Group has certainly developed some prime, green real estate in the Hamptons.

EAST END KID
by Emily Hart Post

LOVE MATH

If the Museum of Mathematics has its way, millions of kids will say that they love math. I went to a brunch party for MoMATH in Westhampton on Sunday. It was run by Carole Hankin, who has known me since I was real little. She introduced the heads of the new museum, opening in New York next year, to people at the Post Stop Cafe (I will always remember that name) and then we went to her home nearby. The museum will show kids how to love math. It's not about adding and subtracting and all that stuff but puzzles and challenges that bring out the math and you don't feel a thing. It is amazing how low America is on the math scale compared to other countries. I was the only kid there so everyone was paying attention to what I liked. I did some of those Rubik's cube-type puzzles and I smiled so I guess people were happy. I hope to go to the opening.

Remember, if you have an event, maybe I will attend if you e-mail my dad, david@nextisland.com.

Oh, Hydrangea

By Tamara Matthews-Stephenson

If there is one flower that reminds me of the Hamptons, it's the hydrangea. July is the perfect season for my cobalt blue Nikko variety. They grow ravenously in my yard, and thankfully survive the deer's rampage throughout the neighborhood. Forget the roses because they have become appetizers for the family of deer that roam my yard, and even the usually hearty geraniums are being nipped down to the stubs. Somehow the proud blue hydrangeas withstand the wet ground and hot afternoons, even as their heavy blossoms weigh them down. I don't know why the deer avoid their brightly hued buds, but I am grateful. My only disappointment is that they do not carry the perfumed scent of other flowers, but that's okay because they make up for it with their beauty. I have several bushes growing just outside of my door, and of course I cut many and set them in pretty vases throughout my house. We arrange them in my white and cream-colored collection of American McCoy pottery, large Mason jars and even beach pails when entertaining outside. I have to remember that hydrangeas droop in the mid-afternoon sun right around the hottest point of the day, so when cutting them off the vine I do so early in the morning. I also soak them in the sink with their blossoms facing down in warm water just after cutting them so they soak up the water and last longer. They have hardy thick stems; therefore I crush the ends a bit so they absorb the water better.

Last April I chaired an event for the non-profit organization the Flawless Foundation, which helps children with neurodevelopmental challenges. I was honored to become involved with Flawless and help out wherever needed for the annual gala, which was held this year in the historic James Otto Khan Burden Mansion in Manhattan. One of the projects I spearheaded was arranging the flowers for the sit-down dinner accommodating 120 guests. With the help of my friend, fellow designer and blogger Amy Dragoo of ABCDDESIGNS, I created fifteen tightly-wound bundles of white garden variety roses in clear glass square cubes as centerpieces for the tables. Because the arrangements were relatively simple, Amy and I chose to arrange them in a style called "Hand Tie." The elegant ballroom at the Burden Mansion was built at the turn of the century, so although we were working on a tight budget, the flowers needed to be substantial without blocking guests' views when dining. Celebrity chef David Burke created an exquisite menu for the evening. I quickly realized these flowers needed to be regal. Thankfully, Amy had just returned from Chicago where she completed a Hand Tie class with renowned floral designer Suzanne Cummings. Over the course of the project, Amy taught me this technique of arranging flowers in a spiral formation, and all the while twisting with one hand. When making these arrangements, the flowers become tightly wound together and the stems swirl in one direction, leaving a beautiful bouquet on top as well as a pretty design of the stems underneath. When we put our flowers in glass containers, the spiraled stems created a lovely look.

After hours of practice I feel ready to take on my hydrangeas. Because of the hearty stems and large buds, hydrangeas are a perfect flower for this technique. Once you have created a spiral with the stems, you must tie the bundle with green floral wire, and instantly a garden flower becomes elegant. I hope you enjoy hydrangeas this summer, whether you plop them in a pretty bucket or spiral the stems or simply soak up their beauty as you pass the many varieties growing in the area. I know they'll bring you joy this summer.

ART COMMENTARY

by Marion W. Weiss

Conrad Marca-Relli at The Pollock Krasner House

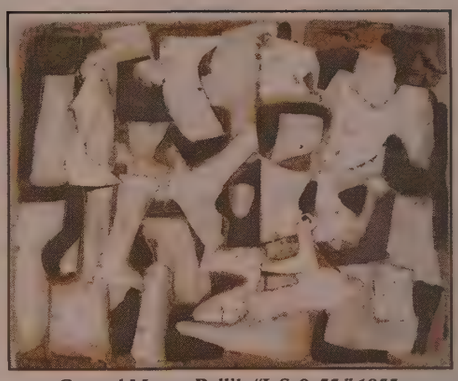
"Proximity is everything," so some people believe. The adage certainly applies to the current exhibit at The Pollock Krasner House where Conrad Marca-Relli's work (from 1953-56) garnishes the walls. Marca-Relli was a neighbor of Jackson Pollock and Lee Krasner's, which was the impetus for the friendship that grew between them. Artist Alex Russo bought Marca-Relli's home soon after he and his wife moved to Europe, and a friendship also grew between Russo and Krasner because of proximity.

Artists who live near each other often form more than friendships, however. Encouragement and respect are exchanged as well. Sometimes, these artists become collaborators and mentors, and even adopt a similar style or aesthetic. Of course, regarding Marca-Relli, it's safe to say he developed and maintained his own special signature. However, it's intriguing to wonder if he was influenced in any way by Pollock or Krasner. Perhaps the friendship simply contributed to making his years in Springs pleasant ones. We don't know the answer; we're just asking.

Marca-Relli's paintings conjure up emotions, senses and an appreciation of texture/tone. They allow the mind to play, to experience a "stream-of-consciousness" as we engage with the work. Here are some impressions that give voice to such spontaneous interpretations. They are meant to be subjective and respectful rather than flip.

Generally speaking, Marci-Relli's canvases recall an abstract quilt or puzzle, put together piece-by-piece with parts that fit succinctly and some which overlap. Colors are often earth tones, suggesting a fundamental, primitive, essential sensibility. The terrain can be varied: a desert or a cityscape if we were to expand our imagination. Figures sometimes seem part of the setting, but we're not sure. At times (like in "S-54-11"), these figures dwell inside, perhaps in a living room, surrounded by their personal possessions.

In a work like "S-54-18," a seated figure is more definitive and appears to be outside; the picture plane is congested. Conversely, some works are not crowded at all, the individual shapes reminding us of paper dolls, of all things. (Remember, we suggested interpretations would be a result of spontaneous reactions.) Another piece looks like a girl clinging to a cloud and perhaps about to be attacked by aliens.



Conrad Marca-Relli's "J-S-9-55," 1955

Maybe not aliens, but mysterious creatures or an event that evokes discomfort.

A few works use color, including one with a seated woman. It is painted on cardboard, providing a different kind of environment. Other materials are equally arresting, like the artist's ink on canvas. What stands out, however, is Marca-Relli's "Death of Jackson Pollock," a heartfelt homage to his neighbor and more important, his friend.

Bob Markell at Siren's Song

Bob Markell's etchings and monotypes are also an homage, this time to the female figure or "Femme" as the show is called. The collection of works has both an evocative and provocative theme, featuring

HONORING THE ARTIST

by Marion W. Weiss

Lynn Matsuoka

This week's cover, "Big Sky Grazing," is by Lynn Matsuoka, a unique artist who has a "light" touch with "heavy" (substantial) subjects, like horses, Sumo wrestlers and Kabuki theatre actors. Such figures share a common bond: their potent sense of movement. Capturing movement on a two-dimensional surface has often been a very challenging task for visual artists, but Matsuoka is an expert. Her technique of reportage makes her an expert as well when she gives the viewers a behind-the-scenes look at her special worlds.

Matsuoka's use of medium (oil and graphite on archival paper) may account for the delicate style that renders her reportage not quite real, but mysterious and even mythical, capturing the tradition and archetypes of her horses, wrestlers and Kabuki performers. There is something eternal about Matsuoka's works, which reverberates in a viewer's memory.

Q: Your interests are so varied. Take horses, for example. That interest has been with you since you were a young girl.

A: When I was 12 or so, I used to go riding with my father. When I moved back to this area from Japan three years ago, I used to get up early and draw the horses and sometimes their riders at the Hampton Classic. Horses have such beautiful forms; I try and capture that.

Q: How about your penchant for Sumo wrestlers?

A: I went to Japan for a six-month assignment as a fashion illustrator and ended up staying for 37 years. I was impressed with the glitz and glamour of the Sumo wrestling world. I was attracted to it like a moth to a flame. I got a high-level introduction to a well-known wrestler and was able to draw him backstage.

Q: I know you said you gave lectures on Sumo wrestling in Japan. Who was your audience and what did you tell them?

A: I changed the lecture, according to who I was talking to. If I lectured to a ladies group, I would discuss how men developed their bodies, how they turn their bodies into sculpture. For the Deutsche Bank, I talked about the financial part.

Q: And your introduction to Kabuki Theatre?

A: I also got a high-level introduction and worked with various actors for 20 years. I remember one actor would put me in the rafters when the performers were on stage. I was stuffed in a crevice, standing on one foot, It was like I was in Cirque du Soleil.

Q: How in the world did you get to that point of going to Japan in the first place?

A: I had art training at The Tyler School (Temple University) and the School for Visual Arts, but it was at Visual Arts that I learned reportage from my teacher Jack Potter. I was hired by CBS to do court drawings, but I had the chance to go to Japan on a short assignment. CBS said to go to Japan first. Just think, if I had come back from Japan, I would have covered the first Watergate Trial.

"Storm Coming"

Q: What are some of your on-going projects now?

A: I will be going to London to do drawings of actor Don Hodge to document his rehearsals for a play. I really like to work in the theatre. I will also be doing an image for the U.S. Tennis Association (a montage of tennis pros) and a montage of Derek Jeter. Jeter's piece will be in my show at the Delaney Cooke Gallery in Sag Harbor in September.

Q: What are your plans for the future? How might you change your style?

A: I want to leave the box I am sitting in. I can say, "I've done that." I want to break out. I am a conservative person. Everything I have done is literal. I want to be more painterly.

An exhibit by Lynn Matsuoka will be at Delaney Cooke Gallery, 17 Madison Street, Sag Harbor, September 2-6. The opening is September 3. She will have an open house at her studio at 221 Snake Hollow Road, Bridgehampton, on Saturday, July 23, and Sunday, July 24, from noon to 5 p.m. Also on view will be birdhouses and feeding tables by British furniture maker Keith Barker, www.hamptonsartist.com. 631-537-5237.

Film Review: "Harry Potter"

By Allyson Zacharoff

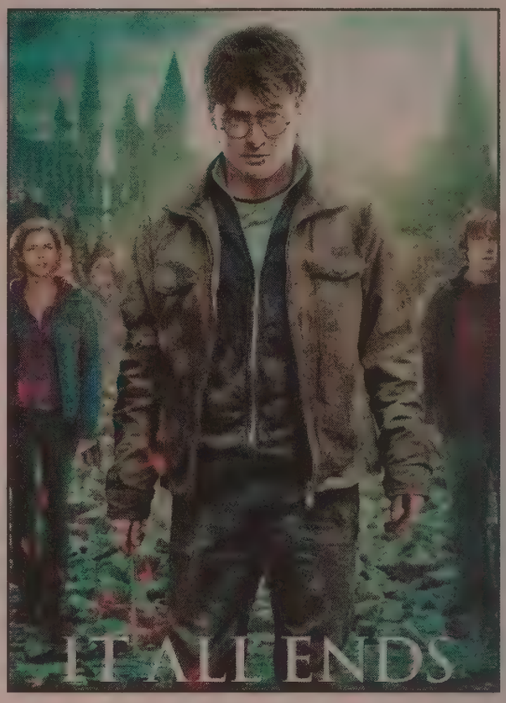
It has finally happened. What people are calling the end of a phenomenon. A movie that many say marks the end of the Harry Potter franchise forever. This past Friday saw the release of Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2 on screens across the country and around the world. This was the eighth and final movie depicting the stories in J.K. Rowling's globally-acclaimed book series about the young wizard, Harry Potter.

The midnight showing at the theater in East Hampton was positively buzzing, as many excited youths expressed their emotions throughout the film. Teenagers in our theater were sobbing almost from the moment the lights dimmed, representative of a generation of young people that grew up waiting for the books to come out and considered Friday night the end of an era.

The movie is available in many theaters in either 2D or 3D, but those who chose the 3D version that opening night received special viewing glasses shaped very much like the iconic ones worn throughout the movies by Harry Potter (Dan Radcliffe) himself. This film concludes Rowling's lengthy tale in a thrilling two-hour adventure of murder, friendship, romance, sacrifice, and, ultimately, the triumph of good over evil.

The movie actually continues the story found in Rowling's final book of the seven-part series, so we enter the story in the middle. Those who have not read the books should see Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1 to really follow the story, as it can otherwise be confusing. The movie's action sequences pull us in almost from the very beginning, as we follow Harry's quest to find several items of Dark Magic. These "horcruxes" actually contain parts of Voldemort's soul. Harry, along with his best friends Ron Weasley (Rupert Grint) and Hermione Granger (Emma Watson), travel throughout the Wizarding World to find and destroy these items so that he can eventually end the reign of terror that Voldemort has instigated by killing the evil wizard himself.

Through a series of close-calls and dangerous adventures, including using a dragon as a means of transport, the trio eventually ends up back at their magical boarding school, Hogwarts. This is where the movie differs the most from the book, as it spends much more time showing the preparations for a large battle that Hogwarts wages against Voldemort and his followers than Rowling's original version did.



As a devoted fan of the novels, I was pleased to see how many of my favorite scenes were included in the film. A moment of triumph for a previously underwhelming character, surprising revelations about Harry's former professor Snape, and a touching example of the true loss that war

King of the Hamptons

The much-celebrated film KING OF THE HAMPTONS, produced and directed by Dennis Lynch, will be shown on Friday, July 29, at 7:30 p.m. at the John Drew Theatre in East Hampton.

The film is a documentary love-affair-comedy about the present-day Hamptons and stars Lynch, fascinated by this place and the publication Dan's Papers, playing hooky for a summer from his family in Massapequa to work his way through a very personal midlife crisis under the guidance of Dan Rattiner, the editor of that publication. Cameo appearances in the film include encounters with Billy Joel, Ed Burns, Christie Brinkley, Alec Baldwin, Mercedes Ruehl, Kim Cattrall, Chuck Scarborough and many other Hamptonites, both famous and infamous.

The film is being shown free of charge on a first come, first-served basis, but at the event donations will be requested to help East Hampton resident Katherine Penati with medical expenses. Ms. Penati appears in the film, and at the present time is seriously ill. All who help will receive a DVD of outtakes, interviews and unseen footage with many of the celebrities and local folks who appear in the film.

Former ABC anchor John Roland will introduce the event. To reserve seats, go to www.hamptonsking.com.

Lynch has just completed a second documentary, They Come to America, about illegal immigration, and he is about to begin work on a third.

Jazz-Inspired Sachal Vasandani

By Alexandra Andreassen

"Music gets to the soul in a way that sometimes language can't," said singer-songwriter Sachal Vasandani. Jazz has inspired many for decades with its free style and opportunity for self-expression, and Vasandani is creating a fresh take on the timeless genre of music, giving his audiences a sense of what jazz can sound like today. He is bringing his latest work, including selections from his new album Hi-Fly, to the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Saturday.

Vasandani started exploring music at a young age, and continued to pursue his love for it during college. He was named Collegiate Jazz Vocalist of the year in 1999 by DownBeat magazine, and has continued to gather notoriety and respect in the music world ever since. Impressively, he had the chance to work with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra with Wynton Marsalis. Vasandani toured internationally after the 2007 release of his first album, Eyes Wide Open, opening for artists like Chris Botti and Joan Osborne, as well as playing at festivals and other venues. His sophomore album We Move (2009) gained even more attention, as he matured as a singer and songwriter.

Hi-Fly was released in June, and in Vasandani's own words, it is the result of his attempt to investigate his jazz roots without being a throwback. He wanted to keep it current and show audiences the new face of jazz, but he still wanted to be true to the jazz genre. He even had the chance to record with legendary jazz singer Jon Hendricks, and they sing together for two of the tracks on Hi-Fly. Vasandani gets inspiration for the songs he writes from his personal experiences, but tries to make them more universal through the lyrics. Many of them are centered around relationships, both good and bad, but he related that he wants "to tell similar stories in new ways."

When asked about his desire to perform in the Hamptons, Vasandani said, "I love the idea of going out there in the summertime." He is excited to perform for the audiences out here, and is excited for some beach time as well. In addition, he noted, "I have heard very good things about the [Westhampton Beach] Performing Arts Center." Jazz music is certainly very fitting for the atmosphere of the summer in the Hamptons.

Vasandani's greatest satisfaction as an artist is to see people connect with his music. "I think every time I get a chance to sing and see people respond," he commented, "especially maybe in the way that I'm feeling—if I'm singing a personal moving song or a sad song, if people get that and they believe it, or I'm singing something joyous and fun and entertaining, and they're moving along with me—that's really one of life's biggest rewards."

Sachal Vasandani at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center, Saturday, 7/23, 8:30 p.m. 76 Main St., Westhampton Beach. For tickets, visit www.whbpac.org or call 631-288-1500. Tickets are $50, $40 and $30.

Theatre Review: "Spamalot"

By Roy Bradbrook

What better description of this show can you have than the one from the program cover, "A New Musical Lovingly Ripped From The Motion Picture, Monty Python and the Holy Grail"? If you are not a Monty Python addict, don't worry. If you have any semblance of a sense of humor, this is a show that will make you laugh from beginning to end. The original productions on Broadway and in London's West End were major successes and this Gateway production, directed and choreographed by Keith Andrews, is as good as the version I saw on Broadway. The whole cast takes to the crazy Pythonesque scenes as to the manor born. Matthew Karr's staging and costumes are first class and the orchestra under Jeff Hofmann does a great job—they manage to resist giving in and laughing with the audience!

How do you describe this kind of humor in print? I really don't know because it depends so much on a combination of words, timing, facial expressions and that magical unknown that enables prime creator Eric Idle to make King Arthur's quest for the Holy Grail such an incredible romp that it kept the opening night audience in fits of uncontrollable laughter. For example, King Arthur fights a duel with the Black Knight in which the latter is gradually dismembered, while all the time he is saying that these were only scratch wounds, even while his arms and legs lay around the stage—it just doesn't work in print but believe me it is hilarious on stage! Similarly, the scene where they attempt to infiltrate a French castle using a giant wooden rabbit modeled on the Trojan Horse. The ploy works, except they have unfortunately forgotten to hide inside it. By the way, the 'killer' rabbit that defends the Grail is something to behold.

Python humor is iconoclastic and no one and nothing is spared. Brits, the French, Catholics and Jews, gays and political extremists are all the butt of jokes that really could only offend those who are too easily offended because the humor, while at time puerile, is never vicious. They also delight in poking fun at stereotypical Broadway shows including Phantom, Les Mis and Fiddler.

Once again, Gateway has assembled a great cast, led by Peter Simon Hilton as the befuddled King Arthur and the gorgeous and seductive Colleen Sexton as the Lady of the Lake who, later on, luckily for Arthur, is transformed into his Queen Guinevere. The legendary Knights of the Round Table include John Rochette as Sir Lancelot, Andrew Kober as Sir Galahad, Matthew Crowle as the 'not so brave' Sir Robin and Chris Cooke as Sir Bedevere, all of whom are major contributors throughout the show and some of whom multitask playing the minor roles as well. The ladies of the ensemble form one of the most beautiful groups seen at Gateway and they are seen at their best as the "Laker Girls," supporting their Lady of the Lake and as French can-can dancers taunting Arthur's army after the fiasco of the wooden rabbit! Almost stealing the show are Jeremy Morse as Arthur's servant who has perfected the art of using coconut shells to make the sounds of horse's hooves, and Brian Golub, whose effeminate Prince Herbert nearly brings the house down as he and the outed Sir Lancelot become an item.

You may go into the theater worrying about the debt ceiling, the Greek economy (or rather the lack thereof) or the parlous state of the Yankees' pitching, but rest assured all will be forgotten at least for that "one brief moment that once was Camelot," to steal a line from the more conventional show about the Arthurian legend.

women who are putting on or taking off some article of clothing. While the effects are sensual, that's not the only aspect of Markell's work worth noting. Rather, it's the details that are so charming.

Details come in all sizes, of course. There's the specific, yet whimsical lines of each figure, the expression on a woman's face, the articulation of the body. And the movement inherent in each activity. There are also the details, which convey a particular time and place: period furniture, patterned bedspreads, the females' clothes. It's not present time, that's for sure. Perhaps it's the turn-of-the-century, a time that speaks for itself in Markell's fetching images.

That the artist has a fine sense of detail and articulation is no surprise, given Markell's experience as a set designer, particularly during the "Golden Age of TV." After seeing this show, we say, "Bring back the good-old days."

can cause show that the director and writers really researched which parts were critical to include in the final film. Although these scenes did not quite manage to capture the deeper emotions in Rowling's extremely intricate books, I give the filmmakers credit for doing what they could with over 700 pages of writing.

The film managed to break at least three box office records this past weekend, and by significant margins. Its midnight release earned $43.5 million dollars, beating the previous record held by last summer's The Twilight Saga: Eclipse by $13.5 million. Harry Potter's opening day earned the movie $92.1 million, this time beating The Twilight Saga: New Moon by $20 million. Even further, it went on to earn $168 domestically in its opening weekend, beating out The Dark Knight by $10 million, and – just to prove its international appeal– the movie, in total, over its opening weekend worldwide, earned $475.5 million dollars. Almost half a billion dollars was spent in just three days on people watching a movie about a young wizard. It's incredible.

For the true fans out there, the story of Harry Potter will never be over. As we constantly contribute to a fandom that includes millions of people worldwide, J.K. Rowling's masterpiece will forever find a lively discussion and new bibliophiles just waiting to learn about the epic tale she came up with just two short decades ago. So for now, it is not truly a moment of "Mischief Managed," but really just one in which we can say that, for now, all is well.

Women on the Water

By Kim Palmer

Recently, 20 women battled the seas, led by Captains Dick and Bette Meade of The Boating School at the Lighthouse Marina in Aquebogue. No, they weren't battling one of the various thunderstorms we've been graced by these past few weeks. Instead they were learning the ins and outs of boating as part of a ladies' boating course known as Women on the Water (WOW), which has both off- and on-water segments.

Navigating women.

The hands-on program, "designed by women, for women," teaches boating practices, as well as safety and emergency procedures. Topics include boating terminology, rules of the "road," safety requirements, and equipment and weather sourcing– and all of that is taught in the land portion of the course. The water portion involves hands-on practice with maneuvering, docking, and electronics.

Regina Smith of the marina pointed out the importance of education on these matters. "So many people who have large boats go out with a captain and don't know what to do should something happen," she says. She emphasized the importance of knowing how to use the radio in case of emergency – the procedure and who to call – as well as charting, in case the boat loses power or gets stuck. When calling for help, it is essential that you are able to cite your location.

The course was exclusively for the marina's customers. Other companies do offer safety courses open to the public, but as Smith says, "They are not as hands-on and personal as our course."

Upcoming events include complimentary boat handling lessons on Saturdays through July and August, the Lighthouse Marina Clam Bake, and the Gregory Children Trust Fund Fishing Tournament. The fishing tournament is a fundraiser for the twin children of one of the marina's past employees who had leukemia, Bob Gregory. Tragically, Gregory and his wife perished in a plane crash on the way to his Leukemia treatment when their children were very young.

These events are for customers only, but the marina still has slips open for this season. They offer dockage and storage, including winter storage in their large indoor facility. Each season starts with a complimentary spring launch party.

For more information on dock slips and upcoming events, contact the marina at 631-722-3400 or info@lighthousemarina.com, or visit www.lighthousemarina.com. The Lighthouse Marina is located at 229 Meetinghouse Creek Road in Aquebogue.

LETTERS

CRAZY BEACH
Dear Dan,

I've been out of pocket the past few days, so please forgive this belated note.

Your coverage of the Noyac Bay Avenue fiasco, coupled with that of your newly-minted reporter, was superb. You dealt with the issues, both in macro and micro, and ended with a well-deserved cry of righteous indignation. You combined a well-done news piece with a great editorial, all under one roof.

Your articles made a huge difference in awareness to date, this proposed reportage might finally and forever free the road, the beaches it serves, the community in which it happens to be located, and wrest it from the hands of a few xenophobic militants who have become self-appointed vigilantes.

Personally I can't think of anyone better capable of understanding the full implications and seeing the story behind the story...with the guts to tell it. Thank you for all you have done.

Sincerely,
Vincent Restivo Jr.
Sag Harbor

This needs to be straightened out. – DR

HEY, BAY BAY
Dear Dan,

Thank you so much for your article about summer fundraisers and keeping money local.

Hear! Hear! Dan's Papers has always been a great media partner with the Bay Street Theatre and we can't thank you enough.

Sincerely,
Tracy Mitchell
Executive Director
Bay Street Theatre
Sag Harbor

We do the best we can. – DR

COLOR CHART
Dear Dan,

Your article questioning Steve Levy's colors has me concerned. Are we not a country of laws? If you were pulled over in your car for some traffic infraction, don't you have to provide an ID and proof of insurance? I think the only persons averse to providing ID would be those with something to hide.

No reasonable person has a problem with immigration. Everyone should oppose illegal immigration. Illegals hurt the economy and pay no income taxes. Children of illegals use the same taxpayer funded programs as United States citizens. Perhaps Mr. Levy's colors are red, white and blue! It seems you are not used to a politician recognizing the rule of law.

I enjoy your paper and most of your columns. This story smells too liberal, even for you.

Sincerely,
Grover A. Hartford, Jr.
Centereach

There's much to what you say, but you can't just leave people... – DR

REAL EINSTEIN
Dear Dan,

It is with pleasure that I read one of your papers when it is available to me, a resident of Connecticut. I was interested in the article about Einstein in the June 10 edition. However, to keep facts straight and to give credit where credit is due, there are two corrections on page 22...

He lived in a well-established house on Nassau Point, not a cabin and the important letter to President Roosevelt was mailed in Peconic, not Southold.

At the time I lived on the road to Nassau Point and it was well known in the community that Einstein was living in the area. The owner of the local store delivered groceries to his home and since this was the means of delivering mail also (by his permission), he was the one who took the famous letter to the Post Office.

Sincerely,
Lois Allen
Hartford, Connecticut

Good details to know. – DR

POLICE BLOTTER

Ketchup

A man in Bridgehampton decided that he was going to threaten the staff at a Bridgehampton eatery after he and his wife were told to try and calm down their children. The mother of the children left and the man returned, lifted up a ketchup bottle and yelled out, "I'm going to destroy this place."

Deer

A deer was hit by a Toyota Prius last week in Southampton. The Prius didn't make it.

No Building Permit

A man in East Hampton walked onto another man's property and began yelling and using profanity at the owner of the home over a dispute about a building permit. In other news, a man in East Hampton began yelling and screaming obscenities at a TCO who issued him a ticket for not having a beach permit.

Joyride

A woman called police after she left the keys in her and parked it in East Hampton, only to find out that somebody took it for a joy ride. The car was filled with mud and trash when it was returned to the woman and she did not know who borrowed it.

Shelter Island

Old Man McGumbus, 101 years of age, Chairman of the Shelter Island Assault Rifle Owners Alliance and former World War II paratrooper, was arrested last week after he became intoxicated while drinking Wild Turkey bourbon at seven in the morning. McGumbus was eating a bacon sandwich that he just got from the Shelter Island deli and was drinking bourbon out of a Styrofoam cup while sitting on a park bench on Main Street. In a drunken stupor, McGumbus then threw the glass bottle of Wild Turkey at a man who was walking into the Shelter Island Coffee Shop and Bookstore, who was dressed in skinny jeans, a Beatles t-shirt and black- rimmed eyeglasses. McGumbus screamed, "Get out of my town you damn hippie!" and launched the Wild Turkey bottle at the face of the victim. The victim then reported that McGumbus lunged for him, but tripped over a beagle, and fell to the ground. When the victim attempted to help McGumbus up, the old man ripped his earring out of his ear and attempted to poke him in the eye. McGumbus then passed out.

Dog Poop

A man in Southampton parked his car at the beach and accidentally left his car in neutral. His vehicle then rolled directly into a dog poop mitt dispenser, from which bags are delivered out freely at the beach in East Hampton and throughout most of the Hamptons.

BIGGER DUCK
Dear Dan,

You ran an article in the June 24 edition about the Big Duck's 80th Birthday. While not totally accurate, it was really funny and I enjoyed it. I would like to mention that "he" can't lay an egg, and was trying to ruffle your feathers. Also he is located in the Town of Southampton, Hamlet of Flanders. This is known as "Big Duck Ranch."

The "Gala" had everything, including Bill Wilkinson and the Long Island Sound Swing Band, which consisted of 20 members. They were great. We had a dance contest and a "best costume of the 1930s" contest and a raffle. Great prizes, a dance instruction certificate from Arthur Murray Studios worth $600 for the winner of the dance contest, and lots of other good prizes. Elaine Thompson, an artist who does great paintings of the East End including the Big Duck and Montauk, displayed her artwork. We also had a buffet and a very big Big Duck birthday cake. Roxie, our real live mascot, was there in a really ducky black dress; she waddled to the music, but was not eligible for the dance contest. Surely she could have won!

Thanks for your support.

VAIL VALLEY, COLORADO | SKI-IN/SKI-OUT ARROWHEAD & BEAVER CREEK

Originally listed for $14M, an opening bid of $6M is in place. This property is GUARANTEED TO SELL TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER. No gimmicks - just a motivated seller. Will it sell to the opening bidder, to another, or to YOU?

There are many extraordinary homes in the Vail Valley but this estate is truly one of the Valley's finest. In fact, it was voted one of the TOP SKI HOMES IN AMERICA by CNBC.

Nestled upon a dramatic mountain hillside, this grand, yet intimate estate rises above Arrowhead Mountain. Unparalleled SKI-IN/SKI-OUT ACCESS is a single lifestyle apology. But there is so much more to this 7,000+ square foot home. IT'S ALL HERE AND THEN SOME. Make it yours.
